WHEN Architects specify EVENHEETERS in organ equipment plans they are taking the final step toward protecting the organ against deterioration caused by damp air and sudden temperature changes. These Architects realize full well the importance of maintaining the correct organ chamber temperature—that even temperature so vital to organ life.

That's why all the leading Architects insist on EVENHEETERS in their equipment specifications. That's why EVENHEETERS are endorsed by the world's leading theatre Architects and that's why you too should specify them in your equipment plans.

EVENHEETERS are a necessity for correct organ maintenance. They are a wonderful investment in organ welfare.

Perry's Egyptian Theater, Ogden, Utah—seating capacity 1280 — is equipped with C-H Simplicity Dimmers

It takes more than a projector to "show" a picture right

A typical installation of C-H Simplicity Dimmers—in the Washington Theater, Bay City, Michigan. A Major switch board is used.

NO trouble to get good films—for you or your competitors. But there is one thing producers can't do for you—skilled as they are in creating popular entertainment. They can't present films for you—and your method of presentation largely determines the pulling power, the financial success of your house.

By creating the atmosphere which harmonizes with the spirit of the picture, C-H Dimmers make good films better; give your patrons what they want, day-dream-inspiring entertainment.

The exclusive design of C-H Simplicity Dimmers gives perfect lighting control—dimming as flickerless as nightfall from full brilliancy to black out—even though part of the light bulbs are out of service. With bases of solid soapstone; contacts of Cophite, which is not affected by heat and is self-lubricating, C-H Dimmers will not burn out. Installations are still operating after 20 years of continuous and expenselessservice.

Regardless of age, seating capacity or scheme of decoration, your theater can be equipped with C-H Dimmers—be made to pull a bigger share of the theater going crowds.

Ask your electrical contractor or architect how easily they are installed and in the meantime write for a copy of the booklet "Illumination Control for the Modern Theater."

CUTLER C-H HAMMER

Perfect Illumination Control for the Modern Theater

Says Ignorance of Lighting Is Most Costly Item

"Your ignorance is the most expensive thing there is in your theatres today," Stanley R. McCandless, instructor in lighting in the department of drama at Yale University, informed a group of theatre managers and producers at Boston recently, when demonstrating the possibilities of proper lighting effects for stages and stage productions. The meeting was attended by all legitimate theatre managers and those from motion picture houses presenting vaudeville or stage numbers.

By utilization of proper lighting, Mr. McCandless showed how no change in costume was required for the production of a great variety of costuming effects. The use of three spotlights and three color lights was made.

All of the costumes used on the thirteen models were remnants bought at two cents per yard, specially dyed at small cost. Miss Joy Higgins, dramatic specialist, had charge of the company of models and Mrs. Elizabeth Higgins Sullivan had charge of the dyeing and preparation of the costumes.

Use of the three primary colors, red, green and blue, were then explained, together with the secondary colors, yellow, sine blue and magenta. Effects of each of the colors alone, then in combination, and finally all at once, which produced a brilliant white, were demonstrated on each of the costumes prepared.

Converting Store Building to Theatre in Macon

A theatre enterprise that will give Publix its first competition in Macon, Georgia, has been launched by The Community Theatres, Consolidated, of Aalanta, of which Arthur Lucas is president, and Wm. K. Jenkins is secretary and treasurer.

Community Theatres has obtained a lease covering three store buildings in Cherry street, in the heart of Macon's retail district, on which a theatre is to be built. Announcement of the deal was made in Macon by the Union Dry Goods Company, owners of the buildings, who have agreed to make the improvements necessary to convert the structure into a modern motion picture theatre.

W. J. Beeland, of Macon, has been awarded the general contract. It is said that the lease and improvements will exceed $200,000. The new theatre will have a frontage of 55 feet and will extend along an alley that separates it from the Macon Telegraph building for a distance of 130 feet. It is expected that the house will be completed by October 1.

Malone Theatre to Reopen Under Owner's Man'ment

The Plaza Theatre, Malone, N. Y., will undergo extensive repairs and have new equipment installed prior to its reopening in September under the personal management of Michael Boumansour. The lease under which the house was operated by the Grand Theatre Co. and the Schine Theatre Enterprise Co., expires August first.

Hal Pulls Up Stakes

WHEN the Lake Shore Limited departed for the West last Saturday it carried with it one of New York's most popular star representatives, Hal Howe, who goes to take up his abode in Hollywood. He has remained a loyal New Yorker as long as possible, but with the transfer of production to the coast, Mahomet has had to go to the mountain. He was seen off at the train by a goodly delegation of editors and fellow press agents. Mrs. Howe, better known in the industry as "Pete," and his son, John, will remain here for a few weeks, winding up affairs. We commend him to the tender mercies of our contemporaries in Cinemaland.

A Regular Director

RALPH INCE is in town with his wife (Lucila Mendez) to film scenes for F B O's "Coney Island" at that famous spot, and we had the pleasure the other day of seeing him for the first time in years.

There are a lot of likable things about Ralph, but, so far as we are concerned, none more so than the fact that he is honestly proud of being a good commercial director. He doesn't talk in grave tones of his "art," nor does he want to discuss the esoterics of pure cinema with you. He is, however, interested in these things: A strong story with a wallop; good acting; realistic atmosphere; accuracy; economy, i.e., value on the screen for every dollar spent. We commend that code to the profession in general.

Just before coming East he finished two pictures, "Shanghaied" and "South Sea Love." Although he says little about his own pictures, we gather that "Shanghaied" is very much worth watching for.

Filming Guest Jewels

CHARLES L. GLETT, producer of the Edgar A. Guest Poetic Jewels distributed by ACA, and Walter K. Scott, chief photographer, returned Monday from an 11,000-mile trip through the southern and western states and Mexico where they found scenes to illustrate the Guest poems.

Most of the four months' trip was made by motor and part by air, water and rail. The camera crew was shooting scenes in Louisiana when the Mississippi flood began and all were compelled to flee, abandoning an old time packet steamer they had chartered for a five-day cruise down the river from Natchez, Miss.

By special permission of Richard Hagerman, governor of the Indian reservation in Arizona and New Mexico, a tribe of Pueblo Indians from the Nambey reservation was permitted to take part in one of the pictures, "When Redskins Bit The Dust." The setting was the heart of the land of the Pueblo and Apache nations. Cowboys who took part were armed with muskets that had been used there in Indian warfare in 1873.

Inspirational Waltons

WALTER CAMP, president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc. and J. Boyce Smith, vice-president, have just returned from a fishing tour at Catalina where they had some remarkable fishing.

On June 4th they went after white sea bass and brought in a record catch—six "button fish," each weighing over 20 pounds. J. Boyce Smith pulled in the largest, weighing 36½ pounds, which is the biggest white sea bass of the season so far, and if it is not exceeded, then he will receive a handsome silver loving cup from the Catalina Light Tackle Club. At present, Mr. Smith and Mr. Camp are proudly displaying the silver buttons which were awarded by the Club for a white sea bass weighing over 30 pounds.

Mr. Camp's largest catch was a 239 pound giant black sea bass which he landed after an hour's fight. Emil Jensen, sales manager for Inspiration, was with them the first four days and, altogether, the party caught nearly a ton of fish—1869 pounds to be exact, including white and black sea bass, barracuda and albacore.

Fox Picnic

RAPID progress is being made with plans for the second annual picnic of the William Fox studio forces at Fox Hills, Calif., on August 14. All committees are busy completing their part in the affair under the supervision of Sol M. Wurtzel, general superintendent, and have set themselves the goal of eclipsing last year's event.

Connie Comes East

CONSTANCE TALMADGE, who has just finished "Breakfast at Sunrise," was scheduled to arrive in New York City this Thursday, prior to sailing for France, where she will join Norma. While in Paris, Constance will acquire some of the lavish wardrobe needed for "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney." The Talmadges plan to return in October.

Ad Man's Stage Play

FRED RATH, of the Paramount Famous-Lasky advertising staff, has placed a play, "Beautiful But Dumb," with the A. H. Woods office for early production. It was written in collaboration with Joseph J. Garren.

Stellar Relations

NO longer is kinship to a star sufficient to win quick and easy screen fame. Loro Bara, sister of Theda, has been doing extra work at M-G-M for a year, and has just been given her first bit in "Tea for Three." Harold Murray, brother of James, is doing a bit in the same picture. Suzanne O'Neill, sister of Sally, has won her own way upward to a place with First National under the name Molly O'Day. A third O'Neill, Isabelle, is doing extra work and bits at M-G-M. Roy D'Arcy's brother and Joan Crawford's cousin are both in the extra ranks at M-G-M.

Lon Chaney, as a Russian moujik, terrorizes Mack Swain in a scene from "Mockery," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer tale of the Russian revolution of 1917, soon to be completed

The House that Jack Built

"THE house that Jack built" isn't a nursery rhyme at the United Artists studios—it's a reality. For Jack Schulze, Mary Pickford's art director, built houses and whole city streets for the star's new vehicle, "My Best Girl."

The street "sets," which are among the most elaborate structures ever made for a motion picture, occupy two city blocks, and are complete from street-cars to traffic signals. Nearly a thousand extras and more than two hundred vehicles were used in filming the "downtown" sequences.

But the two houses Jack built are likewise features of the picture. One of them is a rickety old shack, a remnant almost submerged amid a flood of office and tenement structures, which is reminiscent of the old Telegraph Hill district in San Fran cisco and of Stuyvesant Square in New York.

The other is a triumph of motion picture art. It is a faithful reproduction of the famous Willard Straight home at 1130 Fifth Avenue, New York City, said by experts to be the most perfect example of Georgian architecture in the country. Every detail of the unique circular hallway and the Colonial paneling has been painstakingly followed.

Every piece of furniture was selected to conform to the period, and when genuine specimens could not be obtained in the Los Angeles antique and furniture stores, Miss Pickford's own collection was raided. The dining room chairs are among the star's most prized possessions, having come from Claremont House, owned by the Duchess of Albany. The elaborate wrought-iron gates at the entrance were copied from those formerly used at William K. Vanderbilt's New York home.

Frank Hull, who worked with Erich von Stroheim in the cutting of "The Merry Widow" and "Greed," is serving in a similar capacity on "The Wedding March," soon to be ready for Paramount

An Anchor to Windward

ONE reason why production will always stay in California, says Lon Chaney, is that the modern actor is not the poor business man traditionally associated with the sock and buskin, but has extensive property interests in his community. Chaney, for example, is one of the developers of a huge apple orchard project in Southern California. Lillian Gish is a keen business woman. John Gilbert has, among other things, a machine shop. George K. Arthur operates a number of grocery stores. Lew Cody and Renee Adoree are interested in a beauty parlor. Monta Bell owns and operates a real estate tract and a series of gas stations. Ruth Roland's real estate activities are noteworthy, as are Antonio Moreno's in "Moreno Highlands." Thus, Chaney points out, they would be seriously opposed to shifting production to any other point.

Up They Go!

TWO girls who have been appearing in Educational-Christie comedies have been chosen for important feature roles. Ann Christy, who was an extra girl at Christie less than a year ago, and advanced speedily to leading roles, has been selected as Harold Lloyd's new leading lady; while Miriam "Peanuts" Byron will appear opposite Buster Keaton in his next feature length comedy.

When C. B. Trouped

WHEN "Are You a Mason?" was presented at Wallack's theatre, New York City, on April 1, 1901, the role of Ernest Morrison was played by a promising young actor named Cecil B. DeMille, while the character of Caroline Bloodgood was interpreted by May Robson, an old program recently unearthed at the Pathe DeMille studios shows. Now Miss Robson is a member of the stock company which Mr. DeMille has assembled about him.

Scenarist Recovers

JEANIE MACPHERSON, "King of Kings" scenarist, who suffered a severe nervous breakdown shortly after the Western premiere of the picture, has returned to the Pathe DeMille studios.

Newly elected officers of the Bumpas, Britain's association of film advertising men: H. A. Walliss, chairman; W. F. Husband, secretary; and W. A. Northam, vice-chairman. The organization is now entering on its third year, and has been highly successful in promoting friendly relations with the press in England

An All-American Actor

TED SHIPKEY, All-American end, formerly of Stanford University, was one of the college men screened by First National and College Humor in the contest recently held. He was not one of the winners, but when football sequences for "The Drop Kick" were being filmed at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena he naturally dropped in. As soon as the director spotted him, he was told to report in football togs—and so M. Shipkey is now a screen player, after all.

Doug Demands Detail

KARL OSCAR BORG, designer of the sets for "The Black Pirate" and now for "The Gaucho," says that Fairbanks is a stickler for detail.

"Doug wants every brush stroke of the designer carried out by draughtsmen, builders and decorators. If a dimension is not exact, if color tones are altered, the error must be rectified. The work has a seriousness equal to that of erecting a public library or a modern hotel."

Blondes Pfd.

ANITA LOOS, the petite brunette authoress who wrote "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," has returned from Paris and gone on to Hollywood, where she is to select the screen Lorelei from 20,000 applicants.

Success!

DESPITE a leakage of the sky which lasted all morning, the First National outing at Indian Point last Saturday was a grand success, with some 250 in attendance. Fortunately, the weather cleared off sufficiently in the afternoon to permit of carrying out the athletic program, dance, and other events.

Geronimo's Grandson

CHARLES STEVENS, who is appearing in "The Gaucho," and has been in every Douglas Fairbanks picture since 1915, is a grandson of Geronimo, the famous Apache chief, his father, the first sheriff in Arizona, having married Geronimo's daughter. In the film he is one of the hundred or so South American cowboys, or gauchos.

A Starless Sky

LAST week's efforts of the National Board of Review failed to result in any asterisks to brighten the producer's heart, although two features and three short subjects were unreeled for its inspection.

Truth Is Stranger, Etc.

REAL life has produced a parallel of the plot for Mary Pickford's new picture, "My Best Girl." Miss Ethel Brent, of Springfield, Mass., and her fiance, Chester Lawler, of East Orange, N. J., are the principals in the romance. Lawler is the son of the president of a nationally famous chain of 5-and-10 cent stores, and Miss Brent's romance with him began when she worked in the Springfield store. Miss Pickford, learning of it, sent them a telegram of congratulation.

Lubitsch Arrives and Departs

ERNST LUBITSCH arrived in New York this week from Germany, where he made atmospheric exteriors for "Old Heidelberg," and departed again on Wednesday. His next picture will be for Paramount, and may star Emil Jannings, with whom he was associated on many pictures abroad.

"The Patent Leather Kid"

Reviewed by Edwin Schallert

Editor of the Los Angeles Times Preview and Special Correspondent of Motion Pictures News

LOS ANGELES, July 23.—No matter how much the Great War has been exploited on the screen in the past two years, there is seemingly always room for one more big war picture. Perhaps "The Patent Leather Kid" is the last, (though there is also and lavishly "Wings" in the offing;) perhaps there are still others to follow.

Many persons prophesied that when "What Price Glory" showed it would end the reign of films dealing with events that took place in Europe from 1914 to 1918. "What Price Glory" has come and gone in the key cities, and there are still other war pictures, and the majority of them popular and successful. None of the more recent ones has been as outstanding, however, as "The Patent Leather Kid" gives promise of being.

I saw "The Patent Leather Kid" recently at a preview in Los Angeles. The footage exceeded normal limits, and there were certain scenes that would of necessity have to be eliminated and altered, but there was no question that the audience was deeply impressed, and gave a rapt attention to the story unfolded.

"The Patent Leather Kid" is First National's banner attraction of the year. They have spent a full million dollars on making it, a great deal of this money going into a locationing trip to Camp Lewis in the State of Washington.

The picture spells money, of course, but it isn't this that will hit the public that goes to see it. The story is really the vital thing. It was taken from a short narrative by Rupert Hughes, with the adaptation made by Adele Rogers St. John, and credit for the direction going to Al Santell. Al Rockett was in charge of the production as a whole.

Richard Barthelmess is the star, and his role is the best that he has had in several years. His performance will probably arouse a big sympathetic response from his audience. No less striking, though, is Molly O'Day, whose personality and work in this her first big part will kindle the warmest enthusiasm. This little girl seems to have a rare intuition for emotion and pathos.

The tank warfare gives the production a sweep and bigness which would otherwise be lacking, but is not raised to such prominence as to overshadow the vitality of the human interest side of the story.

Resemblances there are perhaps here and there to "The Big Parade" and other war picturs. There is one scene in particular between the hero and his dying comrade that is reminiscent of the death of Slim in the Vidor production. I cannot say that this detracts materially from the essential effect, which grows out of the love theme.

"The Patent-Leather Kid" is the story of a slacker. The title character is a prize-fighter, insolent, selfish and overbearing to a degree, who, prior to the war, holds a championship in New York's East Side arenas, along with a reputation of never having had his sleekly combed hair mussed when appearing in the ring.

The girl is a cabaret dancer, attracted to him partly because of his bravado and dudishness. There is very good comedy, as well as sentiment, in the earlier portion of the picture. Mathew Betz, as the manager who frames every fight before it is fought, does a characterization notable for humor, while Arthur Stone achieves a seriousness that is quite a departure for him, as well as a vein of comedy.

The real punch of the picture is the change which the war brings about in the characters of the Patent-Leather Kid and the girl. The hero's regeneration is not achieved until his buddy dies on the battlefield, and he overcomes a chronic fear of warfare. It is this that leads up to the climax of a hand grenade attack by him on the enemy in the church steeple, at the culmination of which the youth is all but crushed in the falling ruins. The hospital scene immediately follows. There is a touching pathos subsequently in the boy's recognition of the meaning of patriotism. Under the garb of a well-told story, "The Patent-Leather Kid" carries the constructive message of a national ideal, which makes it significant, as well as an interesting, achievement.

Gives Views on Picture Conditions in Orient

The movie-going habit is spreading rapidly through the Orient and is fast becoming a characteristic of national life as in America, according to B. P. Schulberg, associate producer of Paramount studios, who returned today from a vacation trip to Japan.

The Japanese are endeavoring to break into the production of films to compete with American product, Schulberg said. They are turning out pictures with Japanese players that follow the lines of American pictures.

Although primarily on a vacation trip, Schulberg while abroad made a complete survey of the Oriental picture market and returned loaded with data that will have an important bearing on pictures that are produced with the Oriental market considered as a possibility.

Plattsburg Adopts Law Permitting Sunday Shows

The latest victory in New York State for Sunday movies occurred last week in Plattsburg, where by a vote of 3 to 2, the Common Council adopted a city ordinance which will permit Sunday shows during July and August after 6 P. M. This ordinance was adopted as a result of a demand on the part of Plattsburg residents for Sunday shows, claiming that Sunday baseball was permitted as a form of entertainment and that there was an even greater demand for some form of entertainment on Sunday evenings other than walking the streets.

It is generally expected that an effort will be made early in the fall to continue these shows throughout the winter.

Three Firms Granted N.Y. Incorporation Papers

Motion picture companies continue to incorporate in New York State, either for the purpose of producing pictures or in the operation of theatres. Companies granted charters in Albany during the week included the following: Sydney Sampson Photoplay Exchanges, Inc., Buffalo, $10,000, with Sydney Sampson, Freda Sampson, William J. Serenoffsky, Buffalo; Curtis Productions, Inc., $50,000, Robert G. Thach, N. Preston Morris, Mae A. Hannigan, New York City; 138 West 48th Street Co., Inc., capitalization not specified, Julius Kahn, Jerome Weinstein, Sidney H. Posner, New York City.

The election will be held on the second Thursday in September. For the board of directors have been mentioned C. W. Barrell, Al Selig, Fred Baer, Walter Eberhardt and Tom Wiley. Those nominated for the auditing committee include Henry C. Bate, Victor Shapiro, and Oswald Brooks. Jerome Beatty has been nominated for trustee.

U. S. Continues Probe of Industry

Delving Into Mergers to Determine if Violations of Anti-Trust Laws are Likely

THE Department of Justice is quietly pursuing its investigation of the motion picture industry with reference to possible violations of the anti-trust laws.

The investigation has been going on for several years. Last week an Assistant Attorney-General headed a group of Government operatives in gathering data in New York City. The probe was not started as a result of the decision of the Federal Trade Commission in the Paramount case, but is a continuation of the investigation begun long ago. Naturally, the Department of Justice has before it the mass of evidence accumulated in the Paramount-Trade Commission case, and is understood to be probing the activities of Paramount as one of several phases of the industry now under its scrutiny.

At the Department this week, the Washington correspondent of MOTION PICTURE NEWS was informed that only the usual scrutiny is being given the industry, chiefly with respect to mergers which have taken place from time to time, and which are studied with a view to determining whether anti-trust law violations are likely to occur.

The investigation is being conducted under the direction of Col. William Donovan, assistant attorney-general, and is going ahead with the usual thoroughness of the Department. Sufficient evidence to warrant the instituting of criminal proceedings has not been discovered, up to this point, so far as can be learned.

The Paramount case before the Federal Trade Commission is not yet closed, and will not be until Paramount has had sixty days to comply with the cease and desist order, or a final court decision is rendered.

Satisfactory responses from Will Hays and Paramount-Famous Players to the invitation of the Federal Trade Commission to attend a conference at which the banning of block booking and other abuses in the film industry will be considered, lead officials of the commission to the hope that acceptances will be received in the near future from enough other distributors to ensure the success of such a meeting.

Until a substantial proportion of the distributors have evinced an interest in the conference, however, no date or place of meeting will be set, although it is indicated at the offices of the commission that it would be held probably in New York.

Suggestions have been received that representatives of the exhibitors be invited to attend the conference, but in view of the great number of exhibitors and the fact that any practices agreed upon would be enforced against distributors and not against exhibitors, it is not likely that the proposal will be given favorable action.

Milaukee Houses Raised $46,034 for Flood

THE Milwaukee Film Board of Trade reports that movie theatres in the Milwaukee territory raised $46,034.59 for the relief of the Mississippi flood victims. The value of the film rental contributed free for these performances was $1,520. In a monster benefit sponsored by the M. P. T. O. of Milwaukee and the Film Board of Trade at the Milwaukee Auditorium the sum of $44,514.49 was realized. Magnificent cooperation was given by the Milwaukee public schools, the school children selling more than 80,000 tickets at 50 cents each for this performance.

Paul E. Clemens, assistant superintendent of the Milwaukee public schools, in a letter to Ben Koenig of the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade, asserted that every individual and association allied and affiliated with the amusement interest in Milwaukee rendered aid wholeheartedly. "Never in all my experience," stated Mr. Clemens, "have I seen anything as commendable as what you good people have just done. Splendid as that was, it was only outdone by the manner of its doing."

Jersey Defers Action on Producer Members

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey took no action on endorsement of the Columbus National Convention and the admission of Producer owned theatres at the monthly Board of Directors' meeting on Tuesday last at the Newark Athletic Club, Newark, N. J. It was agreed that action will not be taken "until the National Organization's move has proved itself through a demonstration of sincerity by the Hays Organization and the Producer owned theatres operating in New Jersey."

It was decided to furnish members with a rubber stamp, reading "Any clauses herein that are in addition to those agreed upon on the first day of March, 1926, shall not apply." Thus New Jersey hopes to force the issue of the added clauses to the Standard Exhibition Contract.

A Luncheon Club of members of the M.P.T.O. of N. J. was organized to meet in New York weekly.

The next Board of Directors' meeting will be held in Newton, New Jersey, Tuesday, August 23rd.

Ontario Awaiting Date of Tax Abolishment

Although the Ontario Government intimated that the Provincial Amusement Tax would be abolished on tickets up to 25 cents on July 1, as authorized by the passing of an amendment to the Amusement Ticket Tax last February, no definite announcement has been made from Toronto, the Ontario Capital, as to when the tax relief would become effective.

The amendment bill received the assent of the Lieutenant-Governor over three months ago. Incidentally, a clause in this bill reads: "This act shall come into effect on a day to be named by the Lieutenant-Governor by proclamation."

It is interesting that the present Ontario Governor is Hon. W. D. Ross, a director of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto.

Keene to Determine Harm Done M-G-M Dallas House

Lionel S. Keene, Southern Division manager of Loew's, Inc., is now in Dallas, Texas, where he is looking over the damage done the Loew Melba there by a recent fire. Whether Loew's will rebuild the gutted house, build a new house, or even seek to take over the Old Mill Theatre where the Loew shows are now being presented through the courtesy of the Saenger interests depends on the outcome of Mr. Keen's survey.

After finishing his business in Dallas, Mr. Keane will go to Houston where a new Loew house opens on Labor Day; he will then proceed to Memphis, Tennessee, where Loew's recently secured control of all first run Memphis houses, except the Pantages, through a deal with Publix.

Harold Lloyd Ahead of Production Schedule

Production on the newest Harold Lloyd picture is so far advanced insofar as the sequences filmed in Hollywood are concerned that the comedian and his staff will reach New York several weeks ahead of schedule. Originally, Lloyd planned to start filming in Manhattan around the end of August or early in September, but progress has been so rapid that he will probably get to New York in August.

While in New York the company will film those scenes called for in the story which posses a New York background. The comedian will remain in the Empire City until after the World's series games in October.

Birmingham Anticipates Lively Theatre Battle

IN Birmingham, Ala., those keenly interested in amusement enterprises predict a terrific battle during the coming season. They point out that the town, heretofore, has had only one real large theatre, and now that Publix's Alabama and the new Pantages house are ready for 1928, they expect closer alignment and keener showmanship on the part of everyone now connected with uptown theatres.

Some, indeed, are pessimistic over the outlook, declaring that all these theatres cannot survive. The most probable result will be that if Birmingham itself is prosperous and its industries going full blast, a few more theatres won't seriously affect the situation, and can be absorbed without difficulty. If, however, Birmingham should suffer a slump in business, there will be a different story to tell.

Hays Organization to Co-operate in Trade Commission Conference

IT is understood that Will H. Hays has signified that his organization will co-operate with the Federal Trade Commission in the latter's proposed block-booking conference.

No official announcement was made at the Hays office, but it is believed Mr. Hays has approved the conference. No comment was obtainable at the Commission headquarters in Washington.

It will be recalled that following its decision in the Paramount case against block-booking, the Commission invited all producers to confer with it. It is believed formal announcement of the holding of the conference will be made after a sufficient number of acceptances have been received from distributors.

Admission Tax Repeal Is Practically Assured

Both Houses Ready to Eliminate Tax, Says Report from Washington

REPEAL of the admission tax is practically assured when Congress adopts new revenue legislation next session. Both Republicans and Democrats are in favor of the elimination of this tax, it is indicated by statements of Senator Reed Smoot, Republican, of Utah, chairman of the Senate finance committee, and Senator Pat Harrison, Democrat, of Mississippi, prominent minority member of the committee in Washington, D. C.

The calling of an extra session in October, in order that tax legislation may be handled with celerity is favored by both Senators, who point out that unless this is done it may be impossible to have the new bill ready for adoption by March 15, when all income returns for 1927 must be filed.

Business Manager M. J. O'Toole of the M.P.T.O.A. attributes the proposed action of Congress to the fact that official Washington is ready to place the screen on the same plane as the newspaper in civic and community affairs. Discussing the elimination of the tax Mr. O'Toole said:

"Apart from the fact that there is a treasury surplus which warrants a tax reduction move, there are special reasons why official Washington stands ready to set aside all extra levies on theatres.

"This is due to the fact that they have been sold the idea that motion picture theatre screens are elements of expression, like the newspapers, and that all theatres are community institutions."

Woodhull Talks Schools

Tells Maryland Owners Managers Should Be Put Through Course

AS the annual meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland held at Havre de Gras National President R. F. Woodhull of the M.P.T.O.A. advocated managers' schools in districts, where the theatre owner and manager could meet at given periods and hear the technical and detail elements of the business discussed by experts.

It was the contention of Mr. Woodhull that every manager should know how to handle all phases of theatre operation, so that in any emergency he could take hold of any division himself and successfully carry on.

Among other things emphasized by President Woodhull in his address was the determination of the M.P.T.O.A. to perfect exhibitor organization in every state and division in the country so that within a few months they would have a complete nation-wide body.

Mr. Woodhull took up the question of extended use of presentations and light vaudeville in motion picture theatres and declared he believed it would be better to concentrate on pictures, properly exploit and advertise the same, as the public liked a well presented picture better than side issues.

The meeting was an exceptionally well attended one. Accompanying President Woodhull to Havre de Grace were Chairman A. Julian Brylawski of the National Board of Directors and President Charles Picquet, of the North Carolina Theatre Owners, both of whom made addresses.

The officers of the Maryland Theatre Owners are: Herman A. Blum, President; William M. Whitehurst, Vice-President; Frank A. Hornig, Treasurer; J. Louis Rome, Counsel; and the Board of Directors are: Frank H. Durkee, Walter D. Pacy, Harry Cluster, Samuel Back, Louis Carman, J. W. Bauers and Phillip Miller. William E. Stumpf is business manager.

Foreign Notes

More than half of all the amusement taxes collected by the Danish government during the 1924-25 fiscal year, according to a recent report received by the Motion Picture Section of the Department of Commerce, were paid by motion picture theatres. The film establishments showed a healthy gain while the legitimate registered a decline for the same period.

George R. Canty, trade commissioner in Paris, reports to the Department of Commerce that there are 160 picture houses in northern Africa; 110 in Algeria, 23 in Tunis and 25 in Morocco. Admission prices vary from one to six francs, and taxes eat up 25 per cent or more of the gross receipts in all three countries.

A photo-cinematographic exposition will be held in Warsaw, Poland, from September 8 to October 3. It will be in two groups, embracing respectively motion pictures and artistic photography.

Net profits of Etablissements Gaumont for the fiscal year 1926, were 3,449,454 francs, according to accounts approved at a recent general assembly.

The ordinary general meeting of the Deutsch-Nordische Film Union G.m.b.H. was held in Berlin recently. It was voted to increase the capital stock to 240,000 marks, and to produce seven films during this season, with corresponding imports of seven foreign pictures.

M. Osnola, a Spanish engineer, recently demonstrated at Comoedia hall in Paris a new high glaze screen, which is claimed to cut down necessary electrical current consumption and also to reduce distortion from the sides.

Wall St. Responsible, Says Mary Pickford

MARY PICKFORD says Wall Street is responsible for the proposed slash in salaries. The star-producer declares that costly programs and mergers placed some of the leading film companies in precarious positions and because a few were sick Wall Street called for a general cure.

Miss Pickford said:

"Neither Mr. Fairbanks nor myself agreed to cut wages at our studio. We did not think such a measure was necessary. Bad pictures, in which costly actors and expensive sets were used and which later turned into box-office flops, in my opinion, have caused the real trouble with the screen today. I hope the present conferences under way will provide a solution in the situation caused by excessive production costs."

$16,000,000 Theatre Program Plan of Omaha Company Announced

A $16,000,000 theatre program is contemplated by the Omaha Suburban Theatre Company, according to a statement by officials of the company. Theatres will be built throughout Western Iowa and Nebraska. The officers of the company are George O. Monroe, president and treasurer; Calvin Bard, vice-president, and Gordon O. Ruth, secretary. William H. Creal and Walter H. Creal, Omaha exhibitors, are directors.

With the Hamilton and Beacon of Omaha as the nucleus the chain will extend to Cedar Rapids, Ia., where a 2,000 seat house costing $1,000,000 will be opened September 1st. A 1,000 seat house is also being built at 45th street and Military Avenue in Omaha, at a cost of $150,000. Other houses contemplated for this year's program are one at Hastings, Neb., costing $400,000 and a $125,000 house at Beatrice.

During 1928 $14,000,000 will be expended on theatres. This includes at least two Omaha houses, with others in Nebraskan cities and Western Idaho.

Ohio Warns Exhibitors On Buying Problem

Urges Them Not to Purchase Too Hastily and to Consider Independent Product

P. J. WOOD, business manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, has forwarded a letter to all members of the organization urging them not to buy their product for the coming season too hastily, and suggesting that if they wait they will undoubtedly secure their pictures at more favorable prices to them.

In his letter Mr. Wood predicts after a careful analysis of the situation that the theatre business during the next twelve months will not be as good as during the past twelve months, and suggests that the only chance the exhibitor has to break ahead is to buy carefully. He also urges that the product of the independent producer be given careful consideration.

The letter from Mr. Wood to the Ohio theatre owners follows in part:

"The time of the year has arrived when you are faced with frequent solicitations from representatives of the various film companies, urging that you sign contracts to purchase new product for the coming season.

"After making a very thorough analysis of the situation, we have concluded that there is no need for any exhibitor to be forced into hasty action insofar as the purchase of new product is concerned, as according to all available information there will be, as usual, ample product.

"We are most favorably impressed with the coming season's product of the independent producers and if these pictures, or the best of them, can be bought right it is far better for you to run this independent product at a profit than it will be to run other pictures for prestige—and at a loss.

"You will have to listen to the same old stories from film representatives that if you don't buy your competitor will. In the past too many exhibitors have heeded this threat, with the natural result that they paid big prices for their product and lost money in the operation of their theatres. You can only use so many pictures—and your competitor or competitors likewise.

"If you have to pay prices for your pictures which will not enable you to make a profit, it will be best for you to close your theatre. You can only afford to pay so much for product, and it is a simple matter for any exhibitor to arrive at this figure. If you pay more than this safe average, you are doomed to suffer financially and eventually be compelled to go out of business.

"Present indications are that business conditions, on the average, will not be as good during the next twelve months as they have been the past twelve months, and for this reason you should buy your next season's film for less money than you did last year.

"You know how much you have taken in during the past two or three years. In our opinion your business for the next twelve months is going to be considerably less than the average for the past three years, and it is for this reason that you cannot afford to pay as much for the coming season's product as you did for last year's.

"Don't be stampeded, flattered, coerced or forced into signing any film contracts now. Wait and save money. You can buy as many pictures four months hence as you can now—and at much lower prices. Therefore, HESITATE, HESITATE!

Venetian Theatre, Waterloo Now Under Construction

The Venetian Theatre, which A. H. Blank is erecting at Waterloo, Iowa, will be one of the Blank-Publix chain of theatres. This house has been already under construction for two months and the building will probably not be completed before the end of the year. The approximate date for the opening is set at the first of the new year.

Sunday Opening in Providence, R. I., Proves Complete Success in First Year

WITH regard to the Sunday opening of picture theatres in Providence, R. I., the following statement has been made by Lieut. George W. Cowan, amusement inspector for that city:

"On Sunday, May 2, 1926, the motion picture theatres in Providence were opened, for the first time, under a law passed by the Rhode Island General Assembly of 1926. This Law provided that all motion pictures for Sunday exhibition must have the approval of the National Board of Review. This was agreeable to local regulations which had been in effect here, for week-day showing of films, for quite a number of years and which have been very rigidly enforced for the past five years or more.

"During the year just ended, there have been operated, on Sunday and throughout the week, 14 motion picture theatres. These theatres have exhibited approximately 25,815,000 feet of film of which 6,025,000 feet were new or first run photoplays and comedies. In mostly every case the week's program began on Sunday. No changes were ordered by this department in any picture, no film was rejected, and not a single complaint has been received. This report shows that patrons of motion pictures on Sunday were discriminating in the character of entertainment desired and the success of the operation of the law may be justly attributed as due to the careful supervision on the part of the National Board of Review and the cooperative vigilance on the part of the local authorities in supporting the National Board's action on pictures."

Poli Circuit Sale Near in New England

Stanley Company Will Purchase Extensive Chain in Connecticut

DESPITE the statement of S. Z. Poli that there is absolutely nothing to it, the rumor persists that the Poli circuit in New England is about to be purchased by the Stanley Company of America with Keith-Albee in the background. The reported price is said to be $7,000,000, though figures of $5,000,000 and $9,000,000 have also been mentioned.

That the deal is near consummation seems practically certain and it will give the purchasers practical domination of the theatre situation in Connecticut. It is said to have been negotiated by E. B. Smith & Company of Philadelphia, financial sponsors of the Stanley Company.

A number of conferences were reported held in Wall Street during the past week, at which all arrangements for the deal are said to have been negotiated. It will be an outright purchase and, according to the arrangement, Keith-Albee and Stanley will participate in the management, while Poli and the present executive personnel will have little to do in the future operations of the company.

It has been common gossip in the motion picture industry that the deal has been under consideration for several weeks, with little doubt that it would eventually be consummated. Names of other holders of large theatre interests have also been linked with the Poli rumor. Publix was said to be interested at one time. The Loew circuit was also considered an active bidder.

Before the Stanley Company and Keith-Albee had seriously discussed the possibilities of pooling their holdings, the Keith-Albee group was known to have been negotiating with Poli looking to the purchase of the Poli circuit in New England.

Despite the denial of Sylvester Poli that there is anything in the rumor of the sale of the circuit to the Stanley Company it seems a certainty that within the next few days an official statement will be made announcing the deal closed.

M.P.T.O.A. Invites Chains

Invitation Extended Through Hays Organization; No Block Booking Action

THE M. P. T. O. A. has issued a formal invitation to producer-distributor-exhibitors to join the association. This invitation has been extended through the Hays organization, and carries out the mandate of the recent Columbus convention.

Mutualizing the situation is the next step to be undertaken and the aid of the Hays organization has been asked in this direction with the suggestion that it will be for the benefit of the entire industry. The committee working on this angle is headed by R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. A., and was directed to communicate with Mr. Hays at an administrative committee meeting. The proposition is now under consideration by the Hays organization.

At the M. P. T. O. A. session Joseph W. Walsh, of Hartford, was elected chairman of the administrative committee, and M. J. O'Toole, secretary. This committee made a public declaration regarding censorship. It stated that it was definitely opposed to official censoring of pictures on the ground that the exhibitor and the public are the only qualified censors. This is the first time official action has been taken on the question.

It was anticipated that some action would be taken by the committee on the question of block-booking, but for some reason no step was taken in this direction. In fact it was stated that the subject was not even brought up at the meeting.

"Wings" Premier Postponed Until August 3

The premiere of "Wings," Paramount's aviation picture which was scheduled for the evening of August 1 at the New York Criterion Theatre, has been postponed until the evening of August 8, according to an announcement from A. Griffith Wray, head of the Paramount Road Show Department.

Plans for the presentation of the picture are so elaborate, says Mr. Wray, that Jesse L. Lasky and S. R. Kent have decided that another week of preparation was required.

Columbia Pictures Signs Olga Printzlau

Harry Cohn, vice president in charge of production for Columbia Pictures, announces that he has added the name of Olga Printzlau to his writing staff this week.

During her career Miss Printzlau was connected with most of the pioneer companies such as Edison, Majestic, American, Blue Bird, Ince and others. In latter years she wrote both originals and adaptations for Famous Players, Warner, Universal and First National.

Enlarges Committee to Judge Laemmle Award

PRIOR to his sailing for Europe, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures, decided, in view of the interest in the Laemmle Award, that it would be advisable to increase the number of judges constituting the Board of Decision to seven, instead of five members. The desirability of having every branch of the field and every important news agency reflected in the board prompted the selection of M. Koenigsberg, president of International News Service.

The Laemmle Award, valued at $5,000, is to go to the editor or writer, newspaper or otherwise, who makes the most valuable suggestion during the year in connection with the motion picture industry.

Sennett and Rice Numbers Head Pathe's Aug. 7 List

"The College Kiddo," a Mack Sennett comedy, and "Scents and Dog Sense," a Grantland Rice Sportlight, are the chief offerings on Pathe's schedule of release for the week of August 7. Other shorts on the list include Pathe Review Number 32; "Ant Life as It Isn't," an Aesop film fable; "Topics of the Day Number 32; "Into the Trap," chapter eight of the serial, "The Crimson Flash;" and Pathe News, Issues 66 and 67. The Rice Sportlight has had a pre-release showing at the Roxy in New York.

In "The College Kiddo" are Madeline Hurlock and Eddie Quillan, supported by Andy Clude and Barney Hellum. The Pathe Review number presents: "A Backyard Industry," "It's the Cat's," "The Atlantic City of England," and "Arctic Archie."

Select Support for "The Angel of Broadway"

A strong supporting cast has been gathered to surround Leatrice Joy in her current starring production, "The Angel of Broadway," which Cecil B. De Mille is producing for Pathe. Victor Varconi is playing opposite the star in this feature, which Lois Weber is directing. May Robson is cast in an important role while Alice Lake temporarily forsakes vaudeville to return to screen work in this production. Jane Keckley has a character role and Elise Bartlett, prominent on the New York stage, Ivan Lebedeff and Clarence Burton play other important parts.

Fitzmaurice Special Titled "Rose of the Golden West"

The title finally chosen for George Fitzmaurice's special production for First National, which has been in the making for several weeks under the temporary title of "The Rose of Monterey," is "Rose of the Golden West." Bess Merdyth and Clarence Fernberg prepared the continuity for this screen work from an original story by Minna Smith and Eugene Woodward. Mary Astor and Gilbert Roland have the leads.

Additions to Tiffany's Selling Force

GENERAL SALES MANAGER ED. J. SMITH, of Tiffany Productions, Inc., announces the addition of several new managers and salesmen to the Tiffany selling organization.

H. C. Borger has been appointed district supervisor of the Western Division embracing the Coast and Mountain States. F. M. DeLorenzo received the appointment as manager of the Tiffany Milwaukee exchange. Jack Withers succeeds Bob Cobe as Manager of the Pittsburgh Exchange.

Paul Bush has been appointed manager of the Tiffany Chicago exchange succeeding John Mednikow. Harry Brown, with Universal for several years, is now special representative for Tiffany in the Philadelphia territory.

Kansas City Star Will Show "Rough Riders" in Ball Park Free

ONE of the most unusual motion picture entertainments in the history of Kansas City has been arranged by the Kansas City Star, a daily newspaper which long has boosted the industry.

Imagine, if you can, an audience of 40,000 witnessing a picture, a band of 125 pieces and a screen 40 x 50 feet in size, four times larger than the usual screen in theatres. Through a special arrangment with th Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the first showing in Kansas City of "The Rough Riders" will be shown in Muehlebach Field, home of the Kansas City American Association baseball club, the night of August 3. The park seats 18,000 persons. Twenty-two thousand chairs—comfortable chairs—will be placed in the field to accommodate a crowd totalling 40,000. Admittance will be free, all expenses to be paid by the Star. The orchestra will be led by O. H. Wheeler.

There is no commercial tie-up whatever in conjunction with the big theatre party.

The Star last year leased Convention Hall in Kansas City and staged a free showing of "Peter Pan" for children of Kansas City. The Star was a great supporter of Theodore Roosevelt, which no doubt accounts for its selection of "The Rough Riders" for its 1927 motion picture party.

Equity Plans Abandoned

Tabling of Demands for Equity Shop Brings End to Membership Drive

EQUITY has abandoned its plan to organize film players through membership in its organization. The decision came following the move of the players in tabling their demands for an equity shop. The latter step was made by a commitee of about forty film players with Conrad Nagel acting as their chairman. The meeting at which the decision was made was attended by approximately 1,000 players.

While the equity shop proposition has been abandoned, temporarily at least, a uniform contract has been drafted to which Equity will be a party. The adoption of this contract will be requested of producers. It is said to provide for a maximum number of hours which an actor could be forced to work and to assure proper rest periods from day to day.

With regard to the tabling of the equity shop proposition Conrad Nagel said producers were believed to be sincere in their desire to eliminate difficulties which give rise to complaints. He said that the revoking of the proposed salary cuts removed the incentive for leading figures of the screen to join Equity.

Equity anticipated a large contingent of film actors as members when the threatened cut in salaries was announced and steps were taken to bring them into the fold. With the tabling of the demand for an equity shop, however, Equity decided upon a hands off policy. Regarding the proposition Paul Dulzell, assistant executive secretary of Equity, said:

"Players on the coast haven't been hurt as yet, and so are not sold on the proposition that they need Equity. However, the time is likely to come when studio players will welcome the protection which Equity affords them."

Dulzell declared that Equity would not do any more pleading with the players as Equity does not need them as badly as they need Equity. The association is in a healthy condition financially and stands ready to help either the stage or screen actor when help is needed, said Dulzell.

Large Cast Assembled for "Beau Sabreur"

Ten players have already been chosen for various roles in "Beau Sabreur," Paramount's sequel story to "Beau Geste." Heading the cast in the title role is Gary Cooper. The feminine lead in the picture is Evelyn Brent. Hank and Buddy, characters who were seen in "Beau Geste," are again appearing on the screen in the persons of Noah Beery and Roscoe Karns. William Powell, who contributed a villainous role in the other Wren story, is again cast as a rogue and will be teamed with Mitchell Lewis, who will take the part of Suleimann the Strong. Other members of the cast are Arnold Kent, Raoul Paoli, Jaon Standing and Frank Reicher.

Herbert Bosworth in Cast of "My Best Girl"

The latest addition to the cast of "My Best Girl," Mary Pickford's new picture for United Artists release, is Herbert Bosworth, who will play the role of the father of Charles Rogers, the star's leading man. Lucien Littlefield, William Courtright, Evelyn Hall, Avonne Taylor, Harry Walker and Frank Finch-Smiles are also players who are working in the picture which is now being made at the United Artists studio. The new Pickford vehicle was nearly half completed before the supporting players were selected.

Pantages to Battle W. Coast; Changes to New Policy in First-Run War

LOS ANGELES, July 27.—Pantages, with theatres in many of the important Pacific Coast cities, is subordinating vaudeville to pictures, and is expected to provide the first real opposition to the West Coast chain in what now looks like a first-run war.

As a result of a deal closed by James R. Grainger, for the Fox product 100 per cent in the Pantages houses, an interesting situation is disclosed. Fox owns 36 per cent of the West Coast chain through the deal put through two years ago. Despite this, Grainger has closed with Pantages in a product deal said to involve between $750,000 and $1,000,000.

The cities included are Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, San Diego, Tacoma, Portland, Seattle, Vancouver, San Francisco, Minneapolis, Kansas City and Memphis.

Pantages' new policy will feature the picture above vaudeville, and will give the important Fox product like "What Price Glory" and "Seventh Heaven" pretentious presentations.

Some time ago Pantages adopted the combination picture and vaudeville policy, and is now building several theatres. These building activities may be extended to the East.

The Pantages-Fox deal will furnish first-run opposition to West Coast Theatres, which is now also managing Publix and Loew houses, and has been generally considered to be in control of the first-run situation in Pacific Coast key cities.

It is understood that, some months ago, an overture was made to sell Pantages' chain to one of the large distributor-exhibitor concerns, but this plan did not materialize. Following which, the Pantages expansion plans came into prominence.

Hodkinson Will Re-Enter Film Industry

Attacks Present Leaders; Promises Constructive Program; Assails Block Booking

W. W. HODKINSON, in a statement issued this week, announced that he will re-enter the industry.

His statement, addressed to the "executives of the motion picture industry, bankers with motion picture interests, stockholders and patrons of motion pictures, and the Federal Trade Commission," charged the present leaders of the industry with incompetence.

"A constructive program has been prepared and will be pursued with or without co-operation from the present leaders of the industry until it is once more placed upon a sound basis," said the statement.

"After twenty years of experience with the type of men who sit in the high places in the industry I am convinced that only the pressure of economic an dlegal necessity will make them cooperate toward any useful end," said Mr. Hodkinson.

"I am inclined to believe that the same necessity now pressing upon them will reach through to financial interests and will force the elimination of enough self interest to permit of changes that are necessary for the perpetuation of the industry upon a sound basis.

"Otherwise it is apparent that interests representing the public, both the stockholders and civic and social organizations with the aid of a few competent independents, will surely eliminate the present incompetents and set the motion picture industry up anew.

"A combination of the Federal Trade Commission's decision and the reaction against those who have been defying economic and other natural laws, has brought about a crisis which cannot be averted, by compromise measures or by mere surface remedies.

"The need of the industry today is a complete new business structure that will require and enable each motion picture production and each motion picture theatre to stand solely on its individual and respective worth and merit.

"To aid and facilitate a program of commercial reconstruction I shall endeavor to lay before the Federal Trade Commission such data as I may have to support the position assumed by that body.

"I may add that present mass production and especially distribution are obsolete and out of date.

"Only by neutral, centralized and efficiently operated distribution channels conducted on a common carrier basis, serving impartially each producer, can harmony be brought about.

"There is no evidence that the industry by itself has either the vision, integrity or ability to bring this about. The evidence to the contrary is conclusive. The spokesmen for the industry say that present block-booking and distribution systems must and will prevail. I challenge that statement. They will necessarily fall of their own weight. They have broken down even without the decision by the Federal Trade Commission.

"Motion pictures have been for years the poor man's form of entertainment. Until a few years ago, a working-man was able to take his whole family out for an evening's pleasure, for a small amount of money. Now the prices almost equal those of the legitimate theatre. Many theatres throughout the country have been forced to close, many others are almost ready for the sheriff to take possession. The exhibitor would gladly reduce his admission prices, but with the high rentals and block bookings he is unable to do this. Thomas Marshall said: 'What we need is more good five cent cigars.' We now have them. Bring the movie admission prices back to normalcy, eliminate block-booking, and the picture business will again enjoy properity.

Blaze at De Mille Studio in Culver City

A WIRE received at the Pathe offices in New York, states that a fire of unknown origin broke out on stage number six at the De Mille Studios at Culver City.

Damage to the extent of $100,000 was done before the flames were extinguished. The losses are fully covered by insurance.

Jessel Film Definitely Titled "Broadway Kid"

"The Broadway Kid" has been definitely chosen as the title of the first of two starring vehicles that George Jessel will make for Warner Bros. The story, now being filmed under the direction of Byron Haskin, has borne that working title, for some time, but it has now been decided to let the name stand as permanent. Anthony Coldeway adapted it from his own original story.

June Mathis Dies While Attending Theatre

JUNE MATHIS, veteran scenarist and producer, died suddenly on Tuesday evening while witnessing a performance of "The Squall" at the 48th Street theatre in New York City. At the climax of the play, Miss Mathis suddenly cried out to her mother, Mrs. Emily Hawks, who was accompanying her, that she was dying. Despite the efforts of a doctor and two nurses in the audience, she could not be revived. Death was ascribed to heart failure.

Although Miss Mathis' successes were many, her outstanding achievement was "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which brought fame to Rex Ingram, its director, and to Rudolph Valentino. More recently she was a producer, her most pretentious effort being "The Greater Glory." She was married to Sylvano Balboni, director. She had been in poor health for some time.

Frank Reicher in Cast of New Fox Picture

In the announcement that Fox Films has started production on "Grandma Bernle Learns Her Letters," there is the information that Frank Reicher will play an important character role under the direction of John Ford.

Reicher is noted as a stage director, actor and authority on the theatre. As a director for the Theatre Guild he guided the destinies of "From Morn Till Midnight"; "He Who Gets Slapped"; "The Goat Song," and "Lilliom." In the first three he played important parts. He is also remembered for his guild direction of "Ambush," and "The Cloister," in both of which he appeared.

Christies Sell Interest in Metropolitan

WITH the receipt of final papers and transfer of funds this week, the anticipated deal has been closed whereby the Christies disposed of their interest in Metropolitan Pictures to the new Pathe-DeMille-Keith-Albee combination, according to announcement by Charles Christie, general manager. The negotiations, which were started in New York recently between J. J. Murdock and other officials of the new distributing combination and the Christie brothers, were concluded last week through Arthur Butler Graham, attorney representing the Christie interests.

Under terms of the deal, the Pathe-DeMille organization secures the forty-nine per cent interest formerly held by the Christies in Metropolitan. It does not affect the real estate holdings of the Metropolitan Studios which are still owned by the Christies. The lease of the studios, in effect to Metropolitan Pictures, still remains and it is understood that Metropolitan will remain the operating base for much of the program of Pathe-P. D. C.

Independents' Economical Production Methods Factor in Salary Slash

WHAT is regarded as one of the important factors which led major producers to seek a general salary reduction at the studios is the lessons of "Poverty Row" in Hollywood, where pictures are produced at from 25 to 75 per cent of the cost estimates of the big plants. Completion of a picture in from nine to eleven days, as contrasted with the weeks and months of old line companies, is no unusual occurrence along "Poverty Row." These "quickies" cost on an average of from $25,000 to $50,000, as compared to the $300,000 average at the big studios. The reason is that along the row they are not overburdened with efficiency experts and an army of first, second and third assistants and "yesmen," who are sending overhead soaring.

The independents sign a star for a specified few days, and use up every minute of time working. One director makes exteriors, while the other is busy on interiors, thus reducing shooting time and overhead to a minimum.

British Producers Only to Make Quota Films

Measure Making New Provisions Will Become a Law in November

UNDER a measure whose purpose it is to rehabilitate the British film industry, only British producers will be allowed to make quota pictures. This is a revised bill for establishment of a quota system, which has just emerged from committee, and which will probably become a law in November.

The quota starts with a requisite of 7½ per cent for distributors, obtaining a maximum of 20 per cent in the twelve year period in which it is to be operative. Under terms modified for exhibitors, their quota is reduced to 5 per cent at the inception, increasing to a maximum of 20 per cent.

The British trade is reported in accord with these new conditions, with which Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister of the Board of Trade is also in sympathy. The K. R. S. and C. E. A. representing renters and exhibitors respectively, and the film section of the Federation of British Industries, are in agreement on the following:

Quota on Renters

Nine Under Way for Fox

Production Activity Pushed With Arrival of James R. Grainger on Coast

THE Fox West Coast studios are launched on a new production drive that will start nine feature companies at work within the next two weeks. This announcement was forthcoming simultaneously with the arrival on the coast of James R. Grainger, general sales manager of Fox Films. The new pictures will be under the general supervision of Sol M. Wurtzel, general superintendent in charge of production during the absence of Winfield R. Sheehan, Vice-President.

Among the directors assigned to the new features are John Ford, Frank O'Connor, David Butler, Ray Flynn, Howard Hawks, Alfred E. Green, Lew Seiler and Lambert Hillyer.

The John Ford production is based on the I. A. R. Wylie Saturday Evening Post story "Grandma Bernle Learns her Letters."

Frank O'Connor's next story, as yet untitled, will feature Ted McNamara and Sammy Cohen, the comedy team of "What Price Glory."

David Butler's first directorial effort will be "The Highschool Hero." The story is by William Conselman and the scenario by Seton I. Miller. Sally Phipps and Nick Stuart will be featured.

Ray Flynn's first feature will be a Buck Jones starring vehicle titled, "Blood Will Tell." Kathryn Perry will be opposite Jones in the feminine lead.

The Howard Hawks production, "Bride of the Night," featuring Charles Farrell and Greta Nissen, has been under way for the past four months. Al Green has just completed camera work on Janet Gaynor's first starring vehicle, "2 Girls Wanted."

The latest Tom Mix starring vehicle, "Tumbling River" and the Buck Jones picture, "Chain Lightning" are in the cutting room.

Vocafilm Premiere Fails

Unfortunate Breaks Mar Presentation; Another Showing to be Given

VOCAFILM, the latest device for the synchronization of music with motion pictures had its world's premiere at the Longacre Theatre in New York last Monday night and it proved anything but successful. Evidently the device was not ready for public presentation, as it went almost entirely amiss and was withdrawn from the house the following day.

In withdrawing from the theatre Vocafilm Corporation of America announced that in view of the circumstances attendant upon the opening when the synchronization process failed to measure up to standard and several breaks occurred to mar the presentation, they would suspend their operations temporarily. They asked that judgment be withheld for the time being, pending a second presentation next week, when it is promised the showing will live up to all contentions made by the company. The company said it darkened the Longacre to prevent any suspicion of misrepresentation.

The program arranged for the premiere was an extravagant one and brought out a capacity audience, but it was quite evident from the opening number that something was wrong with the mechanics of the device. It reminded one of the early phonographs that scratched and wheezed badly and the rendition of the numbers was not clarified by what appeared to be a great volume of static that invariably broke out at the most inopportune moments. Also the amplifiers were a bit out of whack with one registering unusually loud and another so faintly it could scarcely be heard.

Included in the program of the Vocafilm were numbers by the Vocafilm Greater Symphony Orchestra, the Original Radio Franks, Wilson Sisters and Washburn, Yasha Bunchuk, Val and Ernie Stanton, George Lyons, Ciccolini, Moss and Frye and the Vocafilm Rhapsodists.

The Vocafilm also rendered the accompanying music for the Babe Ruth picture, "Babe Comes Home."

First Three of Sterling Program Completed

With "Stranded," the first release on the Sterling 1927-28 schedule, now completed at the Coast; and with definite plans already begun and put into operation concerning the two following productions, "Pretty Clothes" and "Outcast Souls," it is felt at the Sterling headquarters that a good start has been made on the 1927-28 program.

William Collier, Jr., and Shirley Mason head the cast of "Stranded," with support by John Miljan, Shannon Day, Florence Turner, Gale Henry, and Lucy Beaumont. Rosa Gore was a last-minute addition to the cast. The film is now being cut and titled, and it is planned to release it on August fifteenth.

Seven New Tiffany Color Classics Completed

More than 700 concerts have been given by this group of artists.

Tiffany Chooses Cast for Zane Grey's "Lightning"

Tiffany Productions announces that the cast for their newest release, Zane Grey's story "Lightning," includes Jobyna Ralston, Margaret Livingston, Robert Frazer, Guinn Williams, Pat Harmon and "Bull" Montana. Many scenes for this story have already been photographed in the Mojave Desert. It is expected that the picture will be ready for release early in August.

Tiffany Prepares to Make Third Dimension Films

Roach Shorts for M-G-M Arrive in New York

PRINTS of the first three of the forty comedies that Hal Roach will make for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for release during 1927-28 are now in New York. These three prints represent the first of each of three of the four series of ten each.

The first to be received is Charlie Chase in "The Sting of Stings." The second is an all star comedy featuring Stan Laurel, Jimmy Finlayson, Oliver Hardy, Edna Marian and Martha Sleeper entitled "Sugar Daddies." The third comedy is the "Our Gang" vehicle entitled "Yale vs. Harvard."

Seven "Oddities" of the twenty-five of these Ufa productions which M-G-M will release during the coming year are now completed. They have been edited and retitled under the personal supervision of Major Edward Bowes, who has shown 11 of the Oddities at his New York Capital.

The seventeen releases which are now ready are: "An African Adventure," "Jewels of Venus," "Soaring Wings," "Dog Days," "Death Traps," "Assorted Babies," "Fight for Life," "Winged Death," "The Lion Hunt," "The Parasol Ant," "Jungle Round-Up," "Pets and Pests," "Secrets of the Sea," "The Monarch of the Glen," "Gritty Pups," "The Chase" and "Atop the World."

First Param't Christie Comedies Finished

THE first group of four Paramount-Christie comedies has been completed, and prints will be in the exchanges about a month before date of release. The initial offering of the group is scheduled for release August 13, with succeeding numbers released one a week.

The four comedies include a Vernon, Dooley, Adams and a Christie featuring Neal Burns. The first Bobby Vernon is "Short Socks," with Frances Lee and Eddie Baker. The first Billy Dooley is "Row, Sailor, Row," with Vera Steadman and Buddy, the dog. "Doctor Quack" will be Jimmie Adams' first starring comedy, with Ethel Shannon and Billy Engle in support. "French Fried" is Neal Burns' comedy, with Doris Dawson and Sid Smith.

Paramount Features in Work Total Seven

At the Paramount Hollywood studio, where the Lasky "emergency cabinet" is supervising all details of production, seven feature productions are now in work, six more are being titled and edited for release, and four are in preparatory stages.

Chief among those pictures now in the process of filming is "Beau Sabreur," one of the largest films on the current Paramount calendar in which are working Gary Cooper, Evelyn Brent, William Powell, Noah Beery, Mitchell Lewis, Roscoe Karns, Joan Standing and others. Also on the lot is the Pola Negri unit making "Sun Kissed" under the direction of Rowland V. Lee. Kenneth Thomson and Jean Hersholt have principal parts in this story, which Lee himself prepared.

Shortly to be released by Paramount are "Wings," the roadshow which is being made ready for its premiere at the Criterion and "The City Gone Wild," Thomas Meighan's new vehicle which James Cruze directed. In preparation are "Open Range," a Zane Grey story which will introduce Lane Chandler; "Now We're in the Air," a new Wallace Beery-Raymond Hatton comedy, and the first George Bancroft starring picture which Josef von Sternberg will direct.

Construction Progressing on Greeneville Theatre

Construction on the Palace theatre, on the site of the old Liberty theatre in Greeneville, Tenn., is progressing rapidly. The house is scheduled to open about August 15.

The building is being erected by Anderson Smith Company for the Booth Enterprises, Inc., and will be equipped with the most modern conveniences and an adequate stage.

The opening of the Palace will not affect plans for the new theatre to be erected on Main street, which will, also, be under the management of Booth Enterprises, Inc.

After the opening of the latter house, the Princess Theatre, situated also on Main street, will be re-decorated throughout.

Crosland Explains Method of Vitaphoning Film

Technical Details of Process Employed on "Jazz Singer" Revealed for First Time in Exclusive Interview

Alan Crosland

ALAN CROSLAND, Warner Bros.' director, who is now filming "The Jazz Singer" with Al Jolson in the title role, explained the details of the method by which Vitaphone vocal numbers will be introduced for the first time into the action of a photoplay, in an exclusive interview with MOTION PICTURE NEWS recently. This is of considerable interest, since the problems to be solved are new, unique and complex.

To begin with, it must be borne in mind that one reel of film is accompanied by just one phonograph record. The film can be cut, rearranged, shortened, or anything desired—when not accompanied by Vitaphone—but since the record cannot be so altered, once a thousand feet of film has been synchronized with a disc it must remain in precisely that form and length.

This means that if a "talking movie" throughout were being made it would be necessary to film a thousand feet at a time, synchronized with the record of the voices, and used in just that form. Such is not the case with "The Jazz Singer," however. Songs will be introduced only at those points where the story hinges vitally upon singing, and there will be no talking.

In reel one, for instance, three songs are to be Vitaphoned in at three different points. During the other portions of the reel there will be a synchronized orchestral score. The method which Crosland will have to employ in filming is this:

First, all those portions of the reel which do not call for singing will be filmed. Then the reel will be assembled and cut, titles and all. The singing scenes will have been carefully rehearsed and timed to the second, and in the places in the reel where these are to go, blank leader of an equivalent length will be placed.

Then, in the Vitaphone studio sets will be erected side by side for all three singing scenes. In the corner will be placed the accompanying orchestra for the picture, with a projection machine to run it off, as is usual in "scoring" a picture for Vitaphone accompaniment. There will be four microphone circuits—one for each of the three sets and one for the orchestra.

When all is in readiness, the projection of the incomplete reel will start, with the leader conducting the orchestra in the synchronized score, which will be picked up by the first microphone. At the instant when the blank leader flashes on the screen, indicating the place for the first singing scene, the orchestra will stop and the microphone on the first set will be switched on while the first scene is recorded. As it comes to an end, one of the scenes previously filmed will flash on the orchestra's screen (if the timing has been right), and the orchestra will resume the score. This process will be repeated for the second and third vocal numbers. All three sets must be lighted and ready, the timing must be perfect, and the players must be ready to make quick changes while the orchestra scores intervening scenes.

Complete Casting for "My Best Girl"

Selections for the supporting cast of "My Best Girl" were finally completed last week with the signing of Carmelita Geraghty and Sunshine Hart for important roles. The cast already chosen is headed by Charles Rogers, leading man, Hobart Bosworth, Lucien Littlefield, William Courtright, Avonne Taulor, Harry Walker, Evelyn Hall and Frank Finch-Smiles. The star has been shooting scenes with only her leading man for the past two months.

Will Solicit Showmen to Join M. P. T. O. K-M

AT a meeting of the board of directors of the M.P.T.O. Kansas-Missouri in Kansas City this week a plan of co-operating with exchange representatives in a membership drive by the M.P.T.O.K-M was approved. The move marked a great contrast in the present feeling between theatre owners and the former attitude which existed not so many years ago. Film salesmen will be given lists of theatre owners in the Kansas City territory who are not members of the exhibitors' body and they will be solicited to join the theatre owners' association "for the good of the industry." There will be no commission or any commercial phase whatever to the film salesmen's connection with the campaign, it simply being a move to join forces to combat unfair legislation and opposition.

Ethlyne Clair Cast for "The Vanishing Rider"

Ethlyne Clair who has been playing leading woman roles in Universal features for the past few months, has been selected as the leading woman for William Desmond in his forthcoming Universal chapter-picture, "The Vanishing Rider."

This picture, the fifth of Universal's serial line-up for the coming season, will go into production about August 1st. Bud Osborne and Nelson McDowell also have been selected for roles. Val Cleveland wrote the story. Ray Taylor will direct it.

Louise Fazenda Will Be Will Rogers' Lead

Louise Fazenda will be Will Rogers' leading lady in "A Texas Steer" and Ann Rork will have the role of Bossy, daughter of the Texas cattleman.

Miss Fazenda is under contract to Warner Bros., and was loaned to Sam Rork. On completion of her work with Will Rogers, she will return to Warners to continue her contract. The rest of the cast will be selected within ten days.

A. B. Francis Signed for "Shepherd of the Hills"

The first player signed to appear in First National's "The Shepherd of the Hills," is Alec B. Francis. Francis will play the title role in this screen adaptation of Harold Bell Wright's novel, which Charles R. Rogers will produce for First National Pictures.

Al Rogel is to direct. Further additions to the cast will be announced shortly.

Clive Brook Signs New Paramount Contract

Clive Brook, English actor under contract to Paramount, this week renewed his affiliation with that company and as a result will be at the Paramount studios for some time to come. The English actor has been in America since 1924 and his first picture for Paramount was "You Never Know Women," which was also Florence Vidor's initial starring vehicle.

No "Story Conferences" for New Menjou Film

ONE of the recommendations of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences—that the continuity of a story be written down to the last minute detail, so that the director can take the script and shoot from it without a single change or delay from "story conferences"—will be taken to heart by Adolphe Menjou when that Paramount star begins his next picture, "The Musician," by Ernest Vajda.

Following the completion of "A Gentleman of Paris," his present picture, Menjou will go into seclusion on Catalina Island with the director and scenarist of his next picture and will not leave Catalina until the continuity of the story has been written down to the last detail.

Endorse Plan for Film Production in Victoria

THE rate payers of the City of Victoria B. C., have endorsed a civic bylaw providing for civic support of a proposal for the establishment of motion picture producing industry in Victoria by British interests, the referendum being passed by a vote of 2,137 to 663.

The city was authorized to guarantee bonds of the company to the extent of $200,000, after $500,000 had been raised among British film distributors and exhibitors.

Five Stern Comedies Set for Summer Release

The Stern Bros., producers of comedies for release through Universal, have scheduled five of their comedies for distribution during the summer months. A Buster Brown Jewel comedy, "Buster's Initiation," is the first release for the period. Gus Meins directed from the newspaper comic strip by R. F. Outcault. Arthur Trimble, Doreen Turner and Pete, the dog comedian, are the principals, as usual. "Snookums Asleep" is the new comedy of "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" series. Meins also directed this one in which Sunny McKeen takes the part of "Snookums" and Sid Saylor and Ethlyne Clair his parents.

"On Furlough" is the name of the "Let George Do It' comedy which Sam Newfield directed. Jean Doree and Ethan Laidlaw play the supporting roles. "What an Excuse" is the new comedy of the "Excuse Maker" series starring Charles King. Newfield also directed this comedy which has Thelma Daniels, Max Ascher and Bud Fine in the cast. The "What Happened to Jane" comedy is "Jane's Relations" with Margery Marcel playing the role of Jane. Earl McCarthy and Joe Bonner are seen in the cast which Scott Pembroke directed.

First National Finishing Present Pictures

With the completion of photography upon George Fitzmaurice's "Rose of the Golden West," the new Barthelmess picture, "The Drop Kick," and "The Crystal Cup," featuring Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall, First National's Burbank studios will have wiped the present production slate clean. Work has already been begun upon a new series.

The three pictures now in work are nearing the end of photography and will probably be in the cutting room by the end of July. "Breakfast at Sunrise" and "The Patent Leather Kid," are out of the cutting room and prints have been shipped to the home office. In work are "The Red Raiders," "Hard-Boiled Haggerty," "Three's a Crowd," "American Beauty," and "The Life of Riley."

The first two of the new series of pictures to go into work are "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" and "Gun Gospel." Within the next two weeks half a dozen more productions will reach the filming stage.

Nagel to Play Lead in Chaney Film

Conrad Nagel has been added to the cast of Lon Chaney's next Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vehicle, "The Hypnotist," a mystery story, an original by Tod Browning, which the director will make in the near future. Waldemar Young did the scenario.

Edna Tichenor, who played the "Spider Woman" in "The Show," also has been added to the cast of "The Hypnotist," to play a strange mystery figure. Polly Moran will be seen in an important role.

Conklin Cast for "Tillie's Punctured Romance"

One of the featured comedians in the new screen version of "Tillie's Punctured Romance," which is to be made as a Paramount-Christie comedy special, will be Chester Conklin. Marie Dressler, Charlie Chaplin, Mabel Normand and Mack Swain appeared several years ago in "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

Chas. Roberts Pathe Agent for Central Europe

Charles Roberts, in charge of the foreign publicity for Pathe Exchange, Inc., for a number of years, has been made Central European Sales Representative for Pathe, and will cover Austria, Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland and Switzerland. He sailed aboard the Majestic on July 16.

George Bancroft Suffers Injury to His Leg

George Bancroft, Paramount star, is now confined to his home in Santa Monica because of a severe injury to his leg. He will be on crutches for a week, says Dr. H. J. Strathern, studio physician, because of a painful bruise that came on top of a bad sunburning.

Rogers' Press Car to Tour United States

ARRANGEMENTS are being completed for a "Will Rogers Press Car" to make a Coast-to-Coast-and-return trip in the interest of his forthcoming motion picture, "A Texas Steer," to be produced by Sam E. Rork for First National.

The "Will Rogers Press Car," a Hupp sedan, will be driven from First National Studios in Burbank, Calif., beginning August 1, to Washington, D. C., and return. Fred E. Hamlin, publicity director of Sam E. Rork Productions of First National Studios, making "A Texas Steer," will drive, accompanied by a photographer and a mechanic.

Cities on the route to Washington, where exteriors are to be made with Will Rogers, Louise Fazenda, Ann Rork and other players, include Las Vegas, Salt Lake City, Denver, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Chicago, Detroit, Columbus, Wheeling, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and New York City.

Turns Lobby Into Night Club to Exploit "Cabaret"

THE lobby of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, N. C., was turned into a night club, with the orchestra, presented as a stage number in conjunction with "Cabaret," furnishing music for dancing. The stunt, arranged by Manager James H. McKoy, proved so popular that on the second night there was an added period of dancing held from eleven until midnight.

Before the opening of the second show at night, the orchestra took up its place in the special night club setting arranged in the lobby. This was just long enough to get a crowd and then announce the next show was just starting and that this orchestra would be on the stage.

Over 300 dancers and lookers-on filled the lobby and enjoyed the party to the fullest extent. The people upstairs were given confetti and serpentines to throw on the people down below, which all added to the merriment of the party.

The lobby was literally dressed up like a night club with lighted lanterns and frames made up in night-club style. All lighting was changed to gay colors and the arch in front of the theatre had three cut-outs of dancing couples—doing the Charleston. These dancing figures were hung on springs and tied together so that they would all face the front at all times. A line was run from the center to the top of the box office and through screw eyes into the box office where the cashier could give it a little pull every now and then. With the help of the wind coming out of the theatre from the typhoon fans, the dancers were in motion all of the time.

The orchestra used on the stage was a local one and contributed their services just for the publicity they got out of it. Cards and special heralds advertised both the picture and the added attraction.

McKoy also obtained the services of a professional dancer. The set for the orchestra and dancer was made up as follows: The back drop was made of sheeting and painted golden yellow. It was flecked with red, blue, green, gold bronze and silver. The columns were made of Nile green cheese cloth and hung on barrel hoops and were flecked with gold and silver bronze. The front of the stand for the orchestra was finished in the same way as the back drop.

Novelty Ad-Kerchiefs Used in Tie-up

Manager E. R. Rogers distributed 2,000 novelty Paramount Ad-Kerchiefs to exploit "Rolled Stockings" when that film played at the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn.

The novelty ad-kerchief consists of a double fold cardboard and sewn together at the top to hold a small piece of silk material.

The double-fold cardboard permitted plenty of space for advertising. The theatre used one side to excellent advantage and a cleaning establishment, which defrayed half the expense, advertised on the other side.

Tie-up With Rose Festival Exploits "The Claw"

Prominent representation in the recent Rose Festival in Portland, Ore., was obtained for "The Claw," at that time current feature at the Columbia Theatre in that city by F. F. Vincent, Universal exploiteer, through co-operation of theatres in key cities and a tie-up with a local bus line.

Theatres in key cities in the territory staged impersonation contests, a girl in each town selected as best able to imitate Laura La Plante, Mary Philbin and other Universal stars were invited to Portland for the festival. The Bell Stage line agreed to transport them and the theatres paid their hotel expenses.

Boys' Foot Race Exploits Altoona Presentation

Alvin Hostler, manager of the Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa., co-operating with the Altoona Tribune, the American Business Men's Club and local merchants, staged a three-mile marathon for boys in the heart of the business district as a means of attracting attention to the theatre and its attraction for the week, "Orchids and Ermine."

Lobby display for First National's "Convoy" at Proctor's Mount Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, N. Y. Telegraph instrument and operator installed in booth by telegraph company through a tie-up arranged by Manager E. W. Hart. The instrument constantly clicked a code message which was typed on telegraph blanks. The message advertised "Convoy" showing booked for an advance date.

Key City Reports

New York City

WITH some relief from the damaging heat of the previous week, business on the good pictures was up in many spots last week on Broadway. It is noticeable, however, that practically all of the high scale pictures in legitimate houses are skidding badly.

One gratifying bit was the results on "The Blood Ship" at the Roxy, which climbed back near the $100,000 figure again. What was more, it built up steadily during the week, nidicating pretty clearly that the customers liked it.

Its rival and neighbor, the Capitol, failed to fare well with "The Gingham Girl," and business was nothing to brag about.

The Paramount had no complaint to make with the return on "Rolled Stockings." No records were made but the week was over several recent seven-day periods.

The Strand fared rather badly with "The Poor Nut," and had the worst week in some time, despite the Broadway run of the play.

Boston

ATTENDANCE improved materially at all of the Boston theatres this week. Apparently the low mark for the season was reached the preceding week and from now forward larger audiences are confidently expected. Boston's usual summer slump, ordinarily extending over a period of several weeks, appears to have been satisfied with one poor week.

Contrary to expectations, the municipal receptions to Col. Lindbergh, Commander Byrd and to the Hawaiian flyers, bunched into two days, Friday and Saturday, resulted in good business at the motion picture theatres with heavy morning and afternoon grosses.

"Metropolis" was undoubtedly the most discussed film in months and its appearance at the Metropolitan was the signal for a big week for that house.

Gene Rodemich and his Merry Makers continue in new and novel numbers, their program blending in with that of Klein and the Grand Orchestra and with a novelty number on the organ by Arthur Martell. Cambria's Publix number is "Mural Painting."

In more modern vein is the offering at Loew's State Theatre where "The Callahans and the Murphys" is the feature, the delightful Irish farce grossing exceptionally well for mid-summer. Phil Spitalny and his Band with Llora Hoffman, soprano, assisting, provides the presentation.

"King of Kings," Boston's only road show, closed its run at the Tremont Saturday night, playing to fair business for the entire six weeks' run, and is succeeded by a musical revue, the premiere of Rosalie Stewart's "A la Carte." These, with "Twinkle Twinkle" at the Colonial, are the only two legitimates in Boston at this time.

"Beau Geste" was held over for a second week at the Fenway, being the second film to be held over recently at that theatre. "Captain Salvation" is showing at Loew's Orpheum with good patronage. "Is Zat So?" is the feature at Keith-Albee's Boston Theatre with fair grosses. "The Climbers" and "Hills of Peril" are the double bills at the Twin houses, the Modern and Beacon. Other features are "Mantrap" at the Lancaster, "Beware of Widows" at the University, "The Masked Woman" at the Washington Street Olympia, "Silver Comes Thru" at the Scollay Square Olympia and "A Million Bid" at the Exeter.

Ottawa

EXHIBITORS of Ottawa, Ontario, had a different sort of a week, in many respects, during the week of July 18. There was the usual carnival in the locality but this did not make much difference because there has been a plethora of corner-lot tent attractions during recent weeks. A British film feature and the official Canadian Government film record of the Diamond Jubilee helped to make the situation of a distinctive type.

Ray Tubman, manager of the Regent, was able to call it an excellent week with the British release "The Flag Lieutenant," which proved to be surprisingly good. It surprised even Mr. Tubman. He used both military and naval parades to the theatre during the week for publicity's sake.

J. M. Franklin, manager of B. F. Keith's Theatre, took a trip to New York but came back to find plenty of cash in the safe because "White Gold" made good despite a sad ending. Jetta Goudal earned many new friends through her work in this one.

The Centre Theatre scored a hit with the short subject, 2,500 feet of the Canadian Jubilee film, which is being released in Canada by Universal. This brought Prime Minister King and many other notables to the theatre to see themselves on the screen and plenty of others paid their way too. Split week attractions included "The World at her Feet" and "Man of the Forest" but the Jubilee print ran all week.

The Imperial Theatre secured improved business but it was altogether "Love's Greatest Mistake" that did it. Manager Tubman installed Rene Marier's Concert String Orchestra as a regular fixture in the pit and the local fame of this unit helped to repopularize this house.

Manager James Moxley had the regulars at the Francais Theatre for the week's series, "Sweet Daddies." "Bertha the Sewing Machine Girl" and "Speed Champion." The Francais has been rather quiet of late.

Albany

THE word "fair" could be used in describing the business done during the past week by the motion picture theatres of Albany, Troy and Schenectady, in both downtown houses and those located in the residential section. The weather remained about normal. There is one outstanding feature, not only of the week, but also of the entire summer thus far, and that is that the exhibitors are not losing any money this season as was the case two or three years ago, in more than one of the larger houses. Probably the best moneymaker of the week was "The Show" that ran at the Leland in Albany, playing to full houses day in and day out. The Mark Strand, the opposition house, did very well with "The Prince of Headwaiters," although business at both houses was only fair when matinees are considered as well as the evening shows. There was a split week at the Mark Ritz in Albany, with "Outlaws of Red River" doing well for the first three days and "The Brute" averaging a bit better for the last three days. "White Pants Willie" failed to attract at the Lincoln in Troy, and the same held true with "Captain Salvation" at the Troy theatre.

Tampa

THE Tampa had two pictures that were exceptionally good the past week, and they kept business up to the VERY GOOD standard. "Twelve Miles Out" opened Sunday to big business. The draw tapered down a little the last two days of the four, but the record for the showing was Very Good. "Tillie The Toiler" was the feature for the last half. Tillie happens to be a daily feature of the Tribune, and is well known locally. She went over Very Good for the entire three days.

The Strand opened the week with "Lost At The Front." Sunday was big and Monday good, making the two days' average Very Good. "The Claw" held the spot for the next three days. It failed to pull and the three days registered Good. "Running Wild" did better and brought Friday and Saturday into the Very Good class.

The Franklin kept business up to the average with "No Man's Law," "The Romantic Age" and "Outlaws' Paradise." The first named picture proved the best draw.

Cleveland

BUSINESS was very good here last week. There are two important reasons for this decided boost. One was that most of the first-run houses had their cooling systems in operation. And the other, and more potent reason, was that the pictures were good.

"The Big Parade" broke records at the Stillman theatre where it opened its first local popular priced engagement. It had previously been road shown here at advanced prices for a period totalling twelve weeks. Nevertheless, crowds jammed the Stillman theatre both afternoon and evening all week. It will be held indefinitely. "Twelve Miles Out" brought out midseason attendance at the Aellen. "Is Zat So?" is an unusually amusing comedy, with strong audience appeal, as evidenced by consistently good attendance at B. F. Keith's Palace. "The First Auto" proved mildly entertaining to a lot of fans who attended the Cameo. The picture was extensively exploited and the title drew well, but the comments were only fair. "Lonesome Ladies," a smart domestic comedy, combined with good vaudeville, brought satisfactory results at the State box office. "Resurrection," second run, although acclaimed by local critics among the ten best pictures of the year, didn't do much at the Park. "The Claw," average melodrama drew better than average summer attendance at Reade's Hippodrome the first half of the week, and coupled with Midget Follies, did exceptionally well all week at Keith's East 105th St. "His Dog," at the Hippodrome the last half of the week, did fairly well. The Circle continues its daily change of revivals with only fair success. Neighborhood houses continue to report business below the average of last year at this time.

Seattle

FOR the third time in as many weeks, the Fifth Avenue Theatre last week far outdistanced all competition, playing to packed houses for seven days with "The Callahans and Murphys," a pleasing Fanchon-Marco Revue featuring all colored talent, and the third week of the phenomenal engagement of Eddie Peabody as musical director and general master of ceremonies. It was the first week of lower summer prices (75c top) and business reached more than $18,000. This was not far short of the house record of $22,300 established the week before with "Naughty But Nice" at an 85c top.

As for the other houses, warm summer weather can be blamed for business that was only fairly good. "The Prince of Headwaiters" at the Coliseum was just an average attraction that failed to arouse much comment. The same may be said for "Evening Clothes' at the United Artists Theatre, where the Menjou film did only a fair business. It was below par for this star.

At the Blue Mouse, the first week of "Dearie" and a new four-act Vitaphone show attracted better than average houses. The picture was only fair in its audience appeal; the Vitaphone subjects headed by John Charles Thomas and Vivienne Segal were the least attractive of any used so far this season, with the exception of the headliners named.

The Columbia with "Whirlwind of Youth" played to average houses. The bill was built up to a small extent by a second-run Lloyd comedy and a strong musical program. "Heroes of the Night" at the Embassy played to fair houses, and "The Perfect Sap" at Pantages, in conjunction with vaudeville featuring the Brown Brothers and their Sax Band, did a pleasing week's gross.

"Is Your Daughter Safe?" at John Danz's Strand Theatre played its fourth week to segregated audiences, but is apparently being held at the house for a record length run, as it is doing very little business.

Milwaukee

COOL weather throughout the entire week brought business in Milwaukee theatres a little nearer normal. The Tuesday half holiday when Maitland visited his home town, brought the holiday spirit to the city and theatres found business very brisk in the evening. Lon Chaney in "The Unknown" was a popular attraction at the Wisconsin. "Is Zat So?" showing at the Strand drew large houses during the entire week. "The Heart of Salome" was the feature at the Alhambra and was very well attended. The "Secret Studio" at the Garden was well received by Milwaukee audiences. "Lonesome Ladies" at the Merrill drew fair houses.

Neighborhood houses also experienced an increased amount of business during the week. The Oriental with "The Better Ole" as the feature was always crowded. This picture played to good houses also at the Modjeska and Tower theatres. "The Tender Hour" at the Milwaukee brought in good business. Patrons of the Colonial appreciated "Frisco Sally Levy." "Fast and Furious" was an attraction at the Venetian.

Central Penn.

ENERGETIC exploitation, well directed, helped to bring fairly satisfactory box office results to the leading downtown theatres in Harrisburg, notwithstanding it is the midsummer season when a let-up in business is looked upon as unavoidable.

The Navy play "Convoy," was shown at the Colonial with fair sized crowds, Manager Charles Jones having resorted to several expedients, in addition to the regular advertising, to help it combat the handicap of hot weather.

An extra boost was given on the night of July 21 to "Man Power" starring Richard Dix, in the Victoria theatre, when the management had the blow-by-blow returns for the Dempsey-Sharkey fight announced by a powerful radio. The theatre was crowded to the doors and this swelled the average of business done in the week.

The offering at Loew's Regent, "Captain Salvation," with Lars Hanson, received favorable comment and attracted average crowds. The State's picture offering was "Birds of Prey," with Aesop's Fables cartoons as an added film attraction. The National Theatre put on an all-comedy bill with moderate success. The feature of the bill was "Rubber Tires" and the program included also Aesop's fables and an "Our Gang" picture.

A double feature bill was presented at the Russell, consisting of Dick Grace in "Flying Fools," and Lillian Rich in "Seven Days." The Russell has been experimenting for several weeks with double feature attractions with results that are understood to be satisfactory thus far.

Kansas City

BUSINESS at most of the first run houses in Kansas City this week—a week of hot weather—was neither good nor bad, just average.

At the Newman John Gilbert in "Twelve Miles Out" played to crowds a little better than normal, while "The Red Kimono" at the Liberty for its third week dropped below the average, after having done a big business for two weeks.

Lewis Stone in "The Prince of Headwaiters" at the Mainstreet did a fair business, slightly above normal, but "Metropolis" on its second week at the Royal was just a bit below the usual weekly attendance. "The Broken Gate" at the Pantages drew average crowds. Syd Chaplin in "The Better 'Ole" did a good second week's business at the Globe.

Detroit

FEATURES billed in the downtown section drew nicely this week. From all reports, business has improved tremendously at the first-run box offices.

"Metropolis" and John Gilbert in "Twelve Miles Out" rated highly among the current attractions and will be held over a second and third week respectively. They are running at the Adams and Madison theatres.

At the Michigan, Esther Ralston's "Ten Modern Commandments" and a double stage show pulled in large crowds throughout the entire week.

Pola Negri in "Barbed Wire" did exceptionally well along with a stage attraction in the Capitol. The State, likewise registered strong, with "Dearie," featuring Irene Rich, and a gay series of vaudeville numbers supervised by Freddie Stritt.

The Colonial picture, "Irish Hearts," went over to medium and large gatherings during its showing. It ran a little better than fifty-fifty.

St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS first-runs and neighborhood and suburban theatres experienced but an average week during the seven-day period ending on July 22.

Here and there a house showed signs of good business at times, notably the Ambassador where a new stage policy was presented with the first appearance of Herbert Rawlinson in "Hollywood's Ambassador of Joy" as orchestra director and general master of ceremonies of the musical and song end of the entertainment. The appearance of Miss St. Louis and her court of twenty-five local bathing beauties also aided business for this big down-town house somewhat. The screen attraction was "The Poor Nut," a collegiate comedy, with Charlie Murray and Jack Mulhall as the fun makers.

The Missouri Theatre experienced an average week. Its screen feature was "The World at Her Feet" with Florence Vidor as the starette.

Loew's State Theatre offered "The Callahans and Murphys," an alleged Irish comedy of the type made famous on the Burlesque stage years ago by Harrigan and Hart. Business was fair.

The St. Louis Theatre in conjunction with Orpheum circuit vaudeville offered on its screen "Is Zat So?" It was an average week for this season.

San Diego

DRAWING well upon the army, navy and marine corps men in and about San Diego the showing of "The Rough Riders" at the Balboa brought good results at the box office. The fact, too, that Colonel Theodore Roosevelt had made San Diego an extended visit on his last trip to the Pacific coast added to the local personal interest in the picture.

Pola Negri, in "Barbed Wire," opened big at the Balboa, following the Roosevelt film. The interest in wartime pictures, such as "Barbed Wire," and "Convoy," the latter being shown recently at the New California to good houses, seems to keep up here, where so many men are constantly in training for military service.

At the Plaza, for the showing of "Wonders of the Wilds" Manager Dwight L. Hill presented in person Burr Nickle, the explorer, on whose expeditions the pictures were taken. Mr. Nickle gave short descriptive talks at each show.

The Superba found "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," with Shirley Mason and Cullen Landis, a good drawing card for a midsummer week.

The Mission reports "Josselyn's Wife"

a very good attraction for the week ending July 16.

Pantages, a vaudeville house, used "The Country Beyond" as its film part of the program of the week of July 11, and followed that with the Louise Fazenda picture, "Cradle Snatchers."

The neighborhood houses, about the city, are finding some slackening in evening attendance, owing to the coming on of real summer weather and a corresponding call to the beach resorts.

Salt Lake City

THE hottest weather yet experienced this summer was had last week but first run theatre business averaged very good.

The Paramount Empress Theatre was crowded to overflowing during the first few nights of the showing of John Gilbert in "Twelve Miles Out" and the management had a very difficult job in keeping the overflow cool and contented, it is stated. In addition to the picture bill offered at the Paramount Empress, there was a special prologue billed as "Lucky Lindy," which also attracted the crowds.

John Gilbert was also a great drawing card in "Monte Cristo" at the Pantages here, exceptionally big business having been done.

The Victory Theatre enjoyed fairly good business during the weeks' run of "A Whirlwind of Youth" with Lois Moran, Vera Veronina and Donald Keith.

The picture at the American which was expected to be a big drawing card, but which fell rather short of expectations was "Babe" Ruth and Anna Q. Nilsson in "Babe Comes Home." The only redeeming feature of the bill is reported to have been "The Old Soak."

Joseph Schildkraut and Lya DePutti in "The Heart Thief" did a good summer business at the Gem.

The Rialto, a second run house, received very satisfactory results from the showing of Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky in "The Night of Love" and also "The Collegians" with Dorothy Gulliver, a Salt Lake girl.

Exploitation ran high this past week, with window cards being used extensively in addition to twenty-four sheet space, etc.

Los Angeles

GRAUMAN'S Egyptian Theatre, which has just changed its policy to showing first runs each week, is attracting average attendance with Richard Dix in "Man Power."

"Is Zat So?" at the Pantages is very popular as the play had a very successful run in Los Angeles and the picture has been advertised as being equally as good.

At Loew's State, Norma Shearer in "After Midnight" is pleasing theatre-goers aided by Gene Morgan in a Fanchon & Marco "Idea" on the stage.

"Stark Love" at the Metropolitan is generally considered to be the most popular picture showing in the downtown theatres. Rube Wolf, on the stage, is drawing his faithful fans who go to see him each week whether the picture is a strong attraction or not.

The first showing of "Beau Geste" at popular prices seems to be doing good business at the Million Dollar. "The Way of All Flesh" closed this week at the Criterion leaving a splendid box office record.

Ticket purchasing is still running heavy at Grauman's Chinese for "The King of Kings" and at Carthay Circle for "Seventh Heaven."

Portland

(Previous Week)

WITH West Coast concentrating their attention upon the Broadway, that theatre has enjoyed continued good busines throughout the early part of the summer.

"The Callahans and The Murphys" drew exceptionally well, and was rated as excellent comedy. Fanchon and Marco's "Books" idea contained several show stopping numbers, including the "Trojan Five," U. of S. C. quintette.

The Blue Mouse, playing the second week of "Simple Sis," got satisfactory business, although the picture was not considered anything unusual. Vitaphone program only fair.

"Resurrection" in its second week at the Columbia got sufficient business to warrant holding it for a third. Picture criticizedly some as morbid, but generally considered unusual entertainment.
icized by some as morbid, but generally for second showing of three days, but drew such crowds over the week-end that it was held for three more days.

"The Telephone Girl," at the Rivoli, drew just average business, although the picture was well liked.

"Matinee Ladies," at the Music Box did not create much enthusiasm, and drew rather poorly.

Seattle

(Previous Week)

IN the face of very tempting summer weather, numerous outdoor activities and shows, and the usual holiday exodus of city residents, the Fifth Avenue Theatre last week established what was probably the greatest week's attendance ever recorded at a Seattle picture theatre for a regular attraction.

The bill was in reality a triple-headliner; it consisted of Colleen Moore's "Naughty But Nice," an elaborate Fanchon-Marco revue called "Ali Baba and the 39 Thieves," and Eddie Peabody, the dynamic "banjomaniac" and musical director from the Metropolitan Theatre at Los Angeles.

Perhaps the second best attraction in point of box office popularity was "Wedding Bills" at the Coliseum Theatre, which did a very pleasing business for the week.

"Frisco Sally Levy" at the United Artists Theatre failed to do the business that was expected of it. At the Blue Mouse Theatre, "Simple Sis" played its second and final week to fair houses. The Vitaphone subjects, headed by The Revelers, are still doing the business at this house, with the picture coming in second place.

For the first time in the city's history, a first run house last week featured a Revival Week of past screen successes. Universal's Columbia Theatre was the house to use the films, and the week's business was only fair. The pictures used during the week included "Polyanna," "Robin Hood," "Birth of a Nation," "Thief of Bagdad," "Orphans of the Storm" and "The Gold Rush."

At the Strand Theatre, John Danz held "Is Your Daughter Safe?" for a third week's engagement. This film, featured as a big sex drama, is playing at advanced prices to segregated audiences and is holding up remarkably well.

Another hold-over was "King of the Pack," which did a very pleasing business at the Embassy Theatre, Joe Danz's 25c house, and was kept on for an extra three-day run. "Midnight Lovers" at Pantages was a secondary attraction, being held down on account of the appearance of Irene Franklin as headliner.

At Hamrick's Egyptian Theatre, in the University district, "Rookies" played to large houses for the entire engagement, in spite of a recent record-breaking two-week engagement at Al Raleigh's Coliseum Theatre in the downtown district.

San Francisco

ANOTHER good week for San Francisco's motion picture houses was witnessed by both first-run and residential theatres in spite of the fact that this is vacation time and a great many leave the city. One reason for the prosperity was that no hot weather was witnessed.

"Resurrection" drew an enormous crowd to the California Theatre because of Tolstoy's popularity here. "The Way of All Flesh," shown at the St. Francis Theatre, was well liked and the house was filled in the evenings. "Twelve Miles Out," was shown at the Granada Theatre, and drew a crowd, many going there to see the presentation act entitled, "Bugs." "Service for Ladies" drew many to Loew's Warfield Theatre, as the picture's star, Menjou, is very popular here. The stage act, with singing and dancing, did a great deal to help fill that house.

"Old Ironsides" did not draw so well in its third week at the Columbia Theatre, where it is shown at advanced prices, many stating they thought it too dull. "The Night Bride," a comedy, drew many to the seats of the Golden Gate Theatre, which were filled every evening, partly due to the vaudeville acts. "The Canyon of Light," attracted many to the Pantages Theatre, as did the acts of vaudeville. At the Union Square Theatre, "The Cheaters" was considered but fair, while the comedy,, "The Vanishing Villains" took very well and the acts of vaudeville drew many to this house. "Where North Holds Sway," drew a larger crowd than expected to the Cameo Theatre.

In the residential houses "The Return of Peter Grimm" drew many to the Coliseum Theatre, and at the Wigwam Theatre, "Don Mike" helped fill the house as did the musical comedy, "The Finnegans and the Goldbergs." "The Social Highwayman" did the average at the Metropolitan Theatre.

Existence of Movie Trust in Texas Charged

WHETHER a violation of the anti-trust ordinances of Texas has actually been made is now being considered by Attorney General Claude Pollard, of Austin, Texas, who has agreed to hear Houston attorneys presenting a charge that a motion picture trust exists in the state of Texas. The general attorney has received a complaint that methods employed by the so-called trust have forced out of competition a theatre owner at Bryan and that these same mehods are about to be used against another motion picture theatre owner in Houston.

"The Trail of the Tiger"

(Universal Serial—10 Episodes)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS Universal chapter play featuring Jack Daugherty and Frances Teague gives every promise of developing some lively entertainment before it is concluded and it seems evident that it is going to be a little bit out of the usual order of serials. Judging by the first episode the action is going to be unusually fast but not so ridiculously furious as is customary.

So far as the first three chapters are concerned there seems to have been a lot of thought put into them. The climaxes are worked up to nicely and they are not of such an impossible order as usually is seen. Nor are the cut-backs of the customary lengthy type. They tell just enough of the preceding chapters very sketchily to give a fair idea of what has gone before. Each episode fairly bristles with action and while the climax of each is exciting, at the same time it is plausible.

Jack Daugherty is the ideal hero for these serials. He has the faculty of not overacting and he completes his heroics apparently with the slightest effort. He seems a very versatile young man, being proficient in swimming, riding or whatever he is called upon to do.

Frances Teague is a newcomer to the screen and evidently familiar with circus life, about which the action is laid. She is good to look at, has plenty of pep, and like Daugherty, does well whatever she is called upon to do. Judging from what has gone on before she will have plenty to do too. Already she has been rescued from drowning when her machine went through an open bridge, and she has been dragged from the jaws of a tiger, escaped from the circus menagerie.

A circus outfit in its entirety was used in the making of the serial and the shots apparently are all authentic, even those having to do with the actual performance. The animals, freaks, wire walkers, tumblers and clowns are all on display to make a nice background for the picture, which has to do with an inheritance for the heroine, about which so far there is much mystery. But Jack Daugherty is on the trail and there'll be some dizzy doings before it goes into the possession of the rightful owner.

"Perils of the Jungle"

(Weiss Brothers Serial—10 Episodes)

(Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy)

THE first three chapters of this episode thriller of the jungle reveal an effort on the part of the producers to crowd with action the reels in which are related the adventures of a big game hunter and a young woman on some mysterious pursuit in the African wilds.

It seems a long time since the Selig zoo—or for the matter of that any collection of wild animals—has figured in a serial play, and this reviewer believes the fans will welcome them after their absence these many years from the episode plays. Indeed, the lions, tigers, elephants, the hyenas, and that extremely well fed looking beastie, the hippopotamus, give a seemingly new twist, a decidedly interesting turn to the familiar mechanics of the serial plot. In this one, there is provision for the always sure-fire mystery element, with a map showing something or other, for which the sympathetic characters and the "heavies" will contend from chapter three on up to the middle of reel twenty-one—the concluding strip in this pictorial adventure tale.

The principal characters are Phyllis Marley (Eugenia Gilbert), Rod Bedford (Frank Merrill), Kimpo (Bobby Nelson), Marks (Milburn Morante), "Brute" Hanley (Albert J. Smith), Moto (Will Herman), Stephens (Walter Maly) and Alexander Marley (Harry Belmore). Phyllis and her father are making their way through the jungle in search of some treasure, the location of which is known only to the father. "Brute" Hanley, who has posed as a sailor on the voyage by ship, accompanies them. They meet Rod Bedford, who, thanks to the mysterious influence over the savages of a boy of the jungle called Kimpo, is saved from the cannibals. Old Marley is seriously stricken and gives his map, showing the position of the treasure, to Bedford. "Brute" determines to obtain the map and get the treasure for himself. The parties, for mutual protection, occupy the same hut. They are open to attack by the jungle beasts, the close of the third chapter showing the stampede of elephants in a raid upon the hut, which as the final scenes are run off, is being thrashed to splinters by the infuriated pachyderms.

In matters of staging and photography the production is up to a good standard, and while the plot is quite rubber stamp, the animals, scenes of which are liberally interspersed through the reels, furnishing an actionable, interest-holding serial.

"The College Kiddo"

(Sennett-Pathe—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

MACK SENNETT'S latest offering through Pathe, as the name implies, is a collegiate comedy of the slapstick variety with Madeline Hurlock and Eddie Quillan featured. It is fairly rough comedy that will probably bring shrieks of laughter in the smaller houses, but it is not among the best of Sennett short reelers. It abounds in impossible situations injected solely for laugh purposes and it goes afar from the campus for its humor.

Eddie Quillan is the usual sap freshman; in fact too much so. He is the college laundryman and is vamped by Miss Hurlock, the college widow. The latter steals the examination papers from the professor's pocket to aid her brother, who is about to be flunked. She secrets them in Eddie's pocket and then inveigles Eddie to her room as the professor is calling. Her efforts to recover the papers from Eddie and at the same time keep the knowledge of her guilt from the professor provide a good part of the comedy.

"Sure Cure"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THAT silk-hatted comedain, Clem Beauchamp, who always reminds one of Raymond Griffith, exhibits his manifold capabilities as a clever comic in this two-reeler of a sanitarium and its patients. He is aided and abetted in the fun-making by two good troupers, Phil Dunham and George Davis. Quite a number of giggles will be let loose when the three patients start clowning and an escaped seal flip-flaps all over the place giving the patients hysterics and making them think they are seeing things. There's more fun when Clem Beauchamp stumbles into the operating room of the sanitarium and proceeds to rid a patient's back of a kink, when Davis gives an imitation of a particularly "loony" patient who derives much pleasure from a pail of water, and the scene where Dunham paints black streaks on his head to cover a bald spot. With the arrival of the seal things are enlivened considerably; the reaction of the patients towards the mammal are ludicrous. Terrified negroes, screeching matrons and the general run for cover of the household make an enjoyable time for the beholder. In addition to the above mentioned three the cast includes Lucille Hutton, Amma Styers, Muriel Evans, Bobby Burns and Ray Turner. This Mermaid comedy was directed by Stephen Roberts.

"Felix the Cat in Art for Art's Sake"

(Educational—One Reel)

HERE'S a novel idea. The story of Pygmalion, the Greek sculptor, who fell in love with his statue, Galatea, is utilized by Pat Sullivan, only that the cartoonist introduces airplanes and parachutes to give it a modern touch, and has Felix play the role of the lover pining away over his clay creation. How this situation came about is an interesting tale: Felix is canoeing with his sweetheart when an aviator invites her aboard his plane. Much to the discomfiture of Felix, she accepts, and he, left alone and heartbroken, weeps so many tears that his canoe sinks. Distressed because he has lost his love, Felix begins to paint her likeness, and seeking inspiration, wanders into an art museum where the painting of "Pygmalion and Galatea" fills with him hope. He, too, will follow Pygmalion and pray for the same result. So he labors at his clay and moulds a statue of his lost one and then bows his head to shed bitter tears, harboring the hope that like Galatea his statue will come to life. And this does come to pass, as Felix's sweetheart "walking home" from her ride above the clouds with the aid of a parachute suddenly descends through the roof of the museum where Felix stands with bowed head. It takes but a twinkling of an eye for her to cast aside the figure and takes its place and smile benevolently upon Felix when he raises his head. It's the happy ending for them.
—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Hold Fast"

(Educational-Cameo—One Reel)

THE efforts of two country bumpkins to win the hand of the fire chief's pretty daughter are the motivating forces that send this comedy whirling down the furrow of slapstick. A village carnival is the grand background for the usual order of rough and tumble, helter-skelter antics. Cliff Bowes is the luckier of the two, and wins the prize money. His rival in love tries about every trick to put him out of the way, but that blissful luck which movie heroes possess turns the march of events so that the rival's villainy rebounds upon himself and he is put out of the running. One scene shows Bowes and a friend dressed up as a wild steer and running around at a furious pace with fire crackers popping off behind them. These and similar gags may not arouse hearty laughter but they will produce results that are fair enough. With Bowes in the cast are Glen Cavender. "Toy" Gallagher, James Hertz and Robert Burns. The director was Mark Sandrich.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Meet the Folks"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

JIMMIE certainly was surprised when he met the folks. Such a motley gang of tall, lanky mountaineers, with their everlasting shotguns in their hands and their women smoking pipes and looking about as tough as the men! That was not the environment exactly that Jimmie, a pill-consuming youth with rabbit courage, wanted. And to make things worse a healthy, rip-roaring feud was blossoming around his ears; his neighbors were bent on exterminating each other and the peace-loving Jimmie felt very much alone and out of place. But the pretty daughter of the rival clan makes life worth living and Jimmie tries to bear up with his clan relations as best he can. His initiation into the family and the night he spends in a dilapidated attic have plenty of funny angles and these are bunched abundantly. The young man in the case is Jimmie Adams, the girl, Gayle Lloyd. Robert Kerr directed this trio.

Tartuffe the Hyprocrite

Rather Heavy But—Jannings Is In It

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

SO popular has Emil Jannings, the talented Teuton, become that they are grabbing his early opuses from the Germanic grab-bag. A deal of celluloid has been ground through the camera since he made "Tartuffe, the Hypocrite." And it can be safely put down that the foreign picture cannot possibly stack up against Herr Jannings' first American entry, "The Way of All Flesh." It has its crudities, noticeable in lighting and make-up and the particularly heavy treatment. But there is power to it just the same.

It bears the stamp of UFA—which is no small mark in its favor. And the Jannings man demonstrates surely and easily the ability which carried him away from the Fatherland. The treatment presents the formula of a play within a play—and since it is a psychological study rather than a dramatic play it calls for much deep thinking. Yet it has mirthful moments. F. W. Murnau (yes, it's the same Murnau of "Variety" fame) has sprinkled it with comedy. He's not a director who places all the eggs in one basket. He guides Jannings, Werner Kraus and Lily Dagover through their paces—Emil as the hypocritical philanderer, the others as the deluded husband and his playful spouse.

As mentioned above it should entertain thinking people.

The Cast: Emil Jannings, Werner Kraus, Lily Dagover, Andre Mattoni, Rosa Valetti, Hermann Picha. Director, F. W. Murnau.

THEME: Psychological study of actor determined to save his grandfather from clutches of ambitious nurse. He plays character of hypocrite to accomplish his aim.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Comedy touches. Deft acting by Jannings. Fine support by Kraus and Dagover. Atmospheric settings.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Jannings is your play here. Bill as picture which shows him in one of his best character studies.

DRAWING POWER: Depends upon Jannings' popularity. Suitable for better class houses with discriminate patronage.

Produced by U.F.A.
Length, seven reels. Released, July, 1927.

Painted Ponies

Slim Plot and Much Slapstick

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

HOOT GIBSON is the victim of rather a poor vehicle in this Western, which is considerably below his standard. As a matter of fact it gives him little in the way of opportunity and is saved from being almost devoid of interest by a number of rip-tearing rodeo shots showing broncs, steers and cow punchers at their best.

The comedy relief, of which there is entirely too much, is entrusted to the hands of Slim Summerville, armed with a slingshot with which he unfailingly hits the villain in the same spot on the anatomy at least twice in every reel.

Hoot does mix up in some lively encounters with the villain which liven up the action a bit as they are staged very realistically. Their mix-up in the water, as Hoot saves the heroine lends quite a thrill to the picture, but in the last analysis the rodeo shots are the saving of the picture.

The story is a very slim one. It brings Hoot from the north to wrest the cowboy championship from the villain, which he does, and he also wins the girl, as usual, as he saves her a terrible fate at the villain's hands.

The Cast: Hoot Gibson, William Dunn, Charles Sellon, Otto Hoffman, Ethlyne Clair, Slim Summerville.

THEME: Western in which the hero wins the cowboy championship from the villain and by his heroic efforts also wins the girl of his choice. . . . . .

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The splendid rodeo shots showing the bucking broncs, bull-dogging and roping; the fight in the water between the hero and villain.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: The name of the star; the wild western atmosphere provided by the actual shots taken from a foremost rodeo; the wild ride of Hoot; the river fight and the rescue of the girl.

DRAWING POWER: Will probably be appreciated in the smaller houses and by the regular followers of the star.

Length, 5,415 feet. Released, September 25, 1927.

Twelve Miles Out

Average Melodrama Pepped Up By Gilbert

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT'S quite a let-down for Jack Gilbert to be taken out of the passionate pastures of romance in order to carry out the carryings on of a more-or-less rough-and-tumble melodrama. The piece may disappoint many of his heavy worshippers who delight in capturing some of his love sparks. But he has go-getting ways, nevertheless—and they're visible throughout the vivid action. Much has been added to the story since it served as a play. For one thing it introduces a draggy prologue.

Once the early reels are over it swings into first rate melodrama. Gilbert and his arch-enemy, Ernest Torrence, give up carrying contraband fire-arms into Africa—and pick up change and excitement off American shores as rum runners. The kick comes when the hero escapes from the coast guard and breaks into the home of heroine. The Gilbertian technique is very evident here. He kidnaps the girl and takes her twelve miles out or so.

The film is on the dividing line between top-notchers and mediocrities. Because of Gilbert and Torrence it should do business.

The Cast: John Gilbert, Ernest Torrence, Joan Crawford, Eileen Percy, Paulette Duval, Dorothy Sebastian, Owen Lee, Edward Earle, Bert Roach, Tom O'Brien. Director, Jack Conway.

THEME: Melodrama of rum-runners and hi-jackers who are deadly enemies over their business and their love affairs. Hero comes clean when he meets right girl.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Ship scenes. Red hot action in rum-running scenes. Volatile action of Gilbert. Characterization by Torrence. Suspense. Atmosphere.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Title affords many advertising possibilities. Play up profitable bootlegging business. Tease title. Bill as affording star red hot action, etc. Feature Torrence.

DRAWING POWER: For all types of houses. Star's popularity will draw them everywhere.

Produced and Distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Length, seven reels. Released, July, 1927.

Snowbound

Fast Moving and Happy Farce

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

HERE is a fast moving screen play with all the action that could be desired, an abundance of comedy of the lively order, a bit of romance, plenty of intrigue and a plot with as many twists and turns as the livliest of the mystery plays. The characters at one stage appear to be inextricably muddled and one starts to wonder how they are ever going to become unravelled, but the tale from then on unwinds itself swiftly and proceeds to a happy conclusion.

Snowbound is described as a farce comedy, fortunately. Had it taken itself more seriously and been filmed as a drama it would have been almost ridiculous, but as it is it provides entertainment that should bring appreciation. There are serious moments when it threatens to develop into the deepest melodrama, but these are passed over and comedy prevails.

The cast is a well balanced one, every member of which does his or her work excellently. Situations that could easily be overdone are splendidly handled by director Phil Stone, who gets the most out of the story. The title is taken from the fact that the players are snowbound in an Adirondack lodge.

The Cast: Betty Blythe, Lillian Rich, Robert Agnew, George Fawcett, Martha Mattox, Harold Goodwin, Guinn Williams, Pat Harmon, William A. Carroll and Dorothea Wolbert.

THEME: A farce comedy of romance and intrigue in which the right man wins the girl after numerous complications with the principals snowbound in an Adirondack lodge.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The race to the Adirondack lodge and the chase by the motorcycle cop. The many fast moving escapades. The meeting of the three couples in the lodge during the raging snowstorm.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up the extremely fast action and the well balanced and capable cast. It can rightfully be termed splendid hot weather entertainment. Emphasize the chase to the Adirondack lodge.

DRAWING POWER: Should go well in almost any house.

Produced and distributed by Tiffany Productions. Length 5,182 feet. Released July 15, 1927.

The Satin Woman

Good Story Well Acted and Well Directed

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

HERE is a feature lavish in its settings, gorgeous in the star, with an emotionally dramatic story well moulded, well acted and well directed. There is nothing lacking to make this an attraction that would meet with the high approval of any type of audience. It has some tremendously dramatic climaxes. It has not been marred by the usual injection of stupid comedy relief; in fact, the comedy element is almost entirely lacking and that which has been infused is of the more pleasing variety.

Mrs. Wallace Reid is a fashion show in herself. Her gowns are gorgeous and she certainly displays them to the best advantage. Women will rave over them and they will not be displeasing to the eye of the male.

Considerable credit is due Walter Lang for a splendid story exceptionally well directed. He shoots straight at the mark and the details of the picture are carried out expeditiously. He has not allowed his cast to overact and his dramatic climaxes are nicely worked out. The story hits into a rapid stride and holds the interest until the final shot.

The Cast: Mrs. Wallace Reid, John Miljan, Rockliffe Fellows, Alice White, Laska Winters, Charles Buddy Post, Ruth Stonehaust, Gladys Brockwell, Ethel Wales. Directed by Walter Lang.

THEME: A society drama of a woman who almost forgot she was a wife and mother until too late. Her obligations outside of the family result in divorce and later her daughter is about to follow in her own footsteps when the mother averts this catastrophe and a reconciliation with her husband is effected to bring about a pleasing conclusion.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The gorgeous display of gowns. The lavish settings; the splendid acting of a well balanced cast and the exceptionally worked out climaxes.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: The name of the star; the luxurious costuming which develops a veritable fashion show. A number of intensely dramatic situations and the all around good work of the cast.

DRAWING POWER: An attraction that should go well in any type of house.

Produced and Distributed by Lumas.
Length, 6,566 feet. Released, July, 1927.

The Prince of Headwaiters

Lewis Stone Makes Picture Enjoyable

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

SO sure of his technique and other acting accomplishments is Lewis Stone that he invariably stands head and shoulders above the material given him. Take this latest for example. It is no great shakes in either its plot or treatment, the idea behind it being quite hackneyed—and the bright touches too skippy to give it novelty. But Stone is there with his personality and talent. And it shapes up as enjoyable.

This time the start appears as an art student in Paris—and according to the Hollywood pattern he sports a Van Dyke. The sequence of the whiskers starts the celluloid off on its revolution from which develops a time lapse. Several years later Stone bobs up as a headwaiter—a good one, too. Leave that to Lew. He has been mourning the death of his girl wife ad interim. During his journeys from table to table in a New York restaurant he discovers the son of whose existence he had been ignorant. The boy is fast in the clutches of a gold-digger—and the headwaiter, with a parental influence guiding him, starts to hand out some fatherly advice. The upshot of it is he saves the youth from himself—aided and abetted by a sweet young thing and some self-sacrifice of his own.

The Cast: Lewis Stone, Robert Agnew, Priscilla Bonner, Ann Rork, Lilyan Tashman, John Patrick. Director, John Francis Dillon.

THEME: Drama of self-sacrifice with father saving youth from himself.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The artist sequence. The scenes of Stone as headwaiter. The expose of gold-digger. The romance. The acting of star. The sets and photography.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: The angle to play here is Lewis Stone's acting. Concentrate your campaign on his personality and talent. Bill as effective story of a father's sacrifice, etc. Feature Ann Rork.

DRAWING POWER: Star has following and his acting should draw patronage. Satisfactory for average houses.

Produced and Distributed by First National.
Length, six reels. Released, July, 1927.

The Sunset Derby

A Jockey Finds His Nerve Again

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

PRODUCED with more care and acted with more restraint than the average race track picture, "The Sunset Derby" is good entertainment. To be sure, the idea held forth—that of a weakling who conquers fear—is not entirely new, it having been played up in practically every type of athletic picture; but in the long run the continual human failings are always bobbing up (they cannot be put down because they are human nature itself) and if we recognize them in picture after picture that is no reason why protests should be made against their eternal recurrence. Racing stories will always be produced because "the sport of kings" carries a continued appeal.

Several good racing scenes and realistic touches of what goes on in the stables help a lot in giving the proper punch. Though you can easily foretell the end of the story, the production shapes up as a good example of its type. Collier is very sincere and in character, but on the whole his interpretation is weakened by too many expressions of horror. Mary Astor, a shy and meek heroine, flits in and out of the picture at regular intervals. Ralph Lewis, Burt Ross, a good kid actor, and David Kirby render appreciative support.

THEME: Jockey asserts his mastery over an inner cowardice and wins big racing event and girl.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Track and stable sequences. Jockey's fall and comeback. The excitement of a big racing event.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Use derbies, horse shoes, riding outfits. Man on horse, dressed as jockey, appropriate bally hoo.

DRAWING POWER: Good appeal for the average run of fans.

Produced by Charles R. Rogers. Distributed by First National. Length 5,800 feet. Released, June, 1927.

The Blood Ship

Hot and Heavy Melodrama Here

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A GOOD old nerve-tingling title decorates this picture—the action of which lives up to its colorful monicker. The piece carries a wallop in the play of melodrama on the high seas. Before you are barely ready to say "Captain Kidd" it informs you that the clipper is a hell-ship the master of which has a habit of beating up his crews. As you can see, the story is a blood relative of Jack London's "Sea Wolf," though there are many marks of originality about it which sets it apart from the London opus.

The skipper has a "shanghai" complex. When a crew runs out on him after a punishing cruise he and his first mate (who registers an equally hard-boiled disposition) use strong-arm methods and shanghai enough sailors to run the ship. Of course, with such a background it is easy to guess that the motivation will concern a mutiny. It's red-hot action which is served up here—and no mistake. The players entertain a deal of punishment from the brutal skipper before he is knocked for a row of anchors.

A love note punctuates the action to balance the hard moments—and Richard Arlen and Jacqueline Logan take care of it very romantically. But it is the melodrama which provides the real interest and suspense. Everything happens that could possibly happen during the voyage. So put it down as vigorous entertainment.

The Cast: Hobart Bosworth, Fred Kohler, James Bradbury, Richard Arlen, Walter James, Jacqueline Logan, Arthur Rankin. Director, George B. Seitz.

THEME: Melodrama of sea with brutal skipper shanghaing crew and punishing them until he gets his just deserts.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The settings. The photography. The action aboard ship. The love interest. The fights. The realism. The acting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tease the title. Bill as vigorous melodrama of sea which affords plentiful action. Play up Bosworth, Logan and Arlen. Use stills of ship, etc.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for downtown houses and strong enough for first runs. Title, backgrounds and acting should draw patronage.

Produced and Distributed by Columbia. Length, seven reels. Released, July, 1927.

"The Blood Ship"—Columbia, Roxy Theatre, New York City

Times: "Vivid characterizations give vitality to 'The Blood Ship.' Spectators at Roxy seemed to enjoy it all. Vigorous, unalloyed melodrama. All characterizations effective. Perhaps those that go deepest and longest in imagination are Hobart Bosworth's Newman, Jacqueline Logan's Mary, James Bradbury's 'Knitting Swede,' Fred Kohler's Fitzgibbons and Blue Washington's negro seaman."

Morning World: "As bulging with menace as anything that has been unveiled here all season. Columbia set out to do good thriller . . . and succeeded. All worked out with proper obbligati."

Daily News: "Well conceived. It's of stuff that gets you. You'll like cast."

Daily Mirror: "Worthily reminiscent of 'The Sea Wolf,' but worthily capable of capturing box office prizes without comparison. Good picture, as intense, dramatic and ofttimes as gory a slice of shipped passions that ever floated into cinema range. Mr. Bosworth enacts sea role so splendidly suited to his talents. Cast collectively and individually contributes sterling performances. Welcome antidote after mollycoddle rush of celluloiders."

Herald Tribune: "Much best thing of week . . . epic qualities. . . . Worth seeing."

American: "If you like tales of sea . . . you will find much in 'The Blood Ship' to intrigue you."

Evening World: "It is all very realistic and audiences . . . will like this very much. Photography is excellent and direction is good."

Telegram: "Unexpected excellence . . . you will like this one."

Graphic: "Excellent direction . . . rates first place with any sea tales which have been transferred to screen this year."

Sun: " . . . Excellent thriller, cleverly acted and directed, intense in general atmosphere. Acting splendid. One held throughout six reels . . . variety of marvelously chosen types . . . that sought for but rarely projected quality of illusion coats the film. Photography, continuity and grouping and camera placements admirable, too. Worth seeing."

Enquirer: "Refreshingly different. Roxy undoubtedly has best picture since theatre was thrown open to public. Full of action. Builds up steadily to striking thrilling climax. Remarkable acting and perfect characterization."

"The Great Mail Robbery"—F B O, Hippodrome, New York City

American: "Will give thousands thrills."

Times: "Crashing melodrama. Audiences still like . . . melodrama done in up-to-the-minute way, according to testimony of those at the Hippodrome yesterday afternoon."

Herald-Tribune: "Great melodrama!"

Daily News: "This has real thrill stuff in it."

Evening Graphic: "Fighting and riding and moments of suspense that are real highlights of dramatic effort."

Evening World: "It is far too thrilling."

Journal: "It's good. Shumway does very good work, and there's plenty of action."

Evening Telegram: "Those who have been yearning for good old fashioned thriller urged to drop everything and dash to Hippodrome. In that huge auditorium is currently hottest, reddest melodrama in these Eastern parts for many a year. We confess that we enjoyed it immensely."

"The Callahans and the Murphys"—M-G-M, Madison Theatre Detroit

Times: "Comedy masterpiece as funny and true as life itself. . . As truly American as Statue of Liberty. . . Hilarity from beginning to end. . . Brawling, merry-making, love and generosity and occasional tear all mixed together into luscious bit of screen comedy. . . Sprinkled with uproarious gags that add to laughter. . . . Will live forever as screen masterpiece of comedy. . . ."

Press Press: "Guaranteed to tantalize your sense of humor even in hottest weather. . . Is real comedy. . . May momentarily draw a lump to your throat but drives it away next moment with hearty laugh."

News: "Source of constant laughter. . . Filled to brim with merry-making and wise-cracking."

"Naughty But Nice"—First National, Washington Street Olympia Theatre, Boston

Traveler: "Colleen Moore displays to fine advantage box office popularity. Role should delight her fans and add more to her list. Made refreshing by star's spontaneous talents for humor."

Advertiser: "Merry scenes enliven star's newest farce. Lives up to title. Exceedingly amusing . . . excellent comic acting. Direction by Millard Webb contains an astonishing assortment of novel touches."

Herald: "Gives Miss Moore opportunity for characterization equaled only by memorable 'So Big.'

a red letter day in film history

¶ August 1, 1927. First release of Paramount's 100% Program. Start of the greatest of Greater Movie Seasons for Paramount exhibitors. Debut of the modern super-type of feature picture and short feature. Everywhere the public is celebrating, with box office dollars. From everywhere pour in congratulations from exhibitors and others hailing the new day. ¶ From Chicago:  "'Metropolis' capacity business first week. For first time in history of Roosevelt Theatre, second week bigger than first. Had intended playing the picture two weeks. Have extended run four weeks, with possibility of more. Max Balaban." ¶ From Los Angeles:  "'Way of All Flesh' triumphant run at Criterion Theatre. Audiences thunder approval. Congratulations to Paramount. Harold Franklin, President West Coast Theatres." And at the Rialto, New York, "Way of All Flesh", now in its 6th week, will run beyond Labor Day! ¶ Also from Los Angeles:  "'Chang' and  'Barbed Wire', playing within a few blocks of each other, the talk of the town. Arch Reeve." From Duluth: "'Chang' getting wonderful business and comment. Duluth Herald devotes editorial to picture, saying 'it is more thrilling than a dozen westerns, more absorbing than a thousand sex dramas, funnier than a hundred comedies and one of the few pictures it is possible to commend utterly without reservation.' Clinton Meyers Co." And at the Rivoli, N. Y., "Chang" ran 9 weeks to 301,000 people! ¶ From Glenwood, Minn.:  "'Beau Geste' played to best business in our entire history. Picture very satisfac-

a red letter day in film history

tory in every respect. A. E. McCauley, Opera House." New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Glenwood—"Beau Geste" takes them all! ¶ From Omaha:  "'Firemen, Save My Child' opened big at Riviera Theatre against strongest possible opposition. Audiences in continuous roars of laughter. A. Mendenhall." ¶ Just a few random samples of wires received. Flashes from a nation responding because their chief source of entertainment has taken a giant leap forward in quality. And the beauty of it is that this is only the start! Coming from Paramount are such jewels as Harold Lloyd's big new comedy, Clara Bow in "Hula",  "Underworld", Richard Dix in  "Shanghai Bound",  "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes", Adolphe Menjou in  "Service for Ladies",  "The Rough Riders", Bebe Daniels in  "Swim, Girl, Swim",  "Beau Sabreur", Fred Thomson's  specials, "Jesse James" and "Davy Crockett", and more, more, more! 80 of them in all!

birth of the modern short feature

¶ August 1, 1927. First release of Paramount short features. Sparkling gems of entertainment supplanting the old fashioned filler type of shorts. The modern Paramount spirit in shorts as well as longs. That was our aim when we planned the Paramount "whole show" policy. We've won—100%! Paramount News, just out, under the editorship of Emanuel Cohen (13 years head of Pathe News), shows what heights a news reel can reach when experience unites with unbounded resources and organization! More speed, more coverage, better service. That's what our mighty army of Paramount News accounts are getting. ¶ A new spirit in Paramount comedies too! We knew that in Christie Comedies we had the best. Exhibitors told us so. Box office figures proved it. Our own eyes confirmed it. The Christie brothers—Al and Charles—first to build a studio in Hollywood. First to advertise short comedies nationally and establish their brand name nation-wide. Famous as star pickers. Wide awake, progressive showmen. Producers of the kind of clean, swift, smart comedy that audiences of today demand. ¶ Clock the roars at Bobby Vernon in "Short Socks", Jimmie Adams in "Dr. Quack", Billy Dooley in "Row, Sailor, Row." Treat your eyes to the luscious Christie girls. Watch the 36 de luxe Christie Comedies for 1927-8 as they trip merrily forth from the finest comedy studio in the world. Paramount-Christie Comedies. Laugh leaders. ¶And Paramount-Edward Everett Horton Comedies too. 6 of them on the industry's only new-era short features program. A brand new style of comedy. 2-reelers made with the care and class of features. Horton, of "Poker Faces" and "Taxi! Taxi!" fame. Well known star and very droll. Popular names in the casts of these Hortons too. A quality product in every way. First release August 1, called "No Publicity." 5 more coming. ¶Then, to lend even more spice, Paramount Novelties. Already the Paramount Theatre, New York, has shown one—"The Elegy." Which hard-boiled Variety says "marks a new era in short features." More Paramount Novelties on the way. Together with 26 Krazy Kat and 26 Inkwell Imps Cartoons. Cream of the pen and ink comedy product.

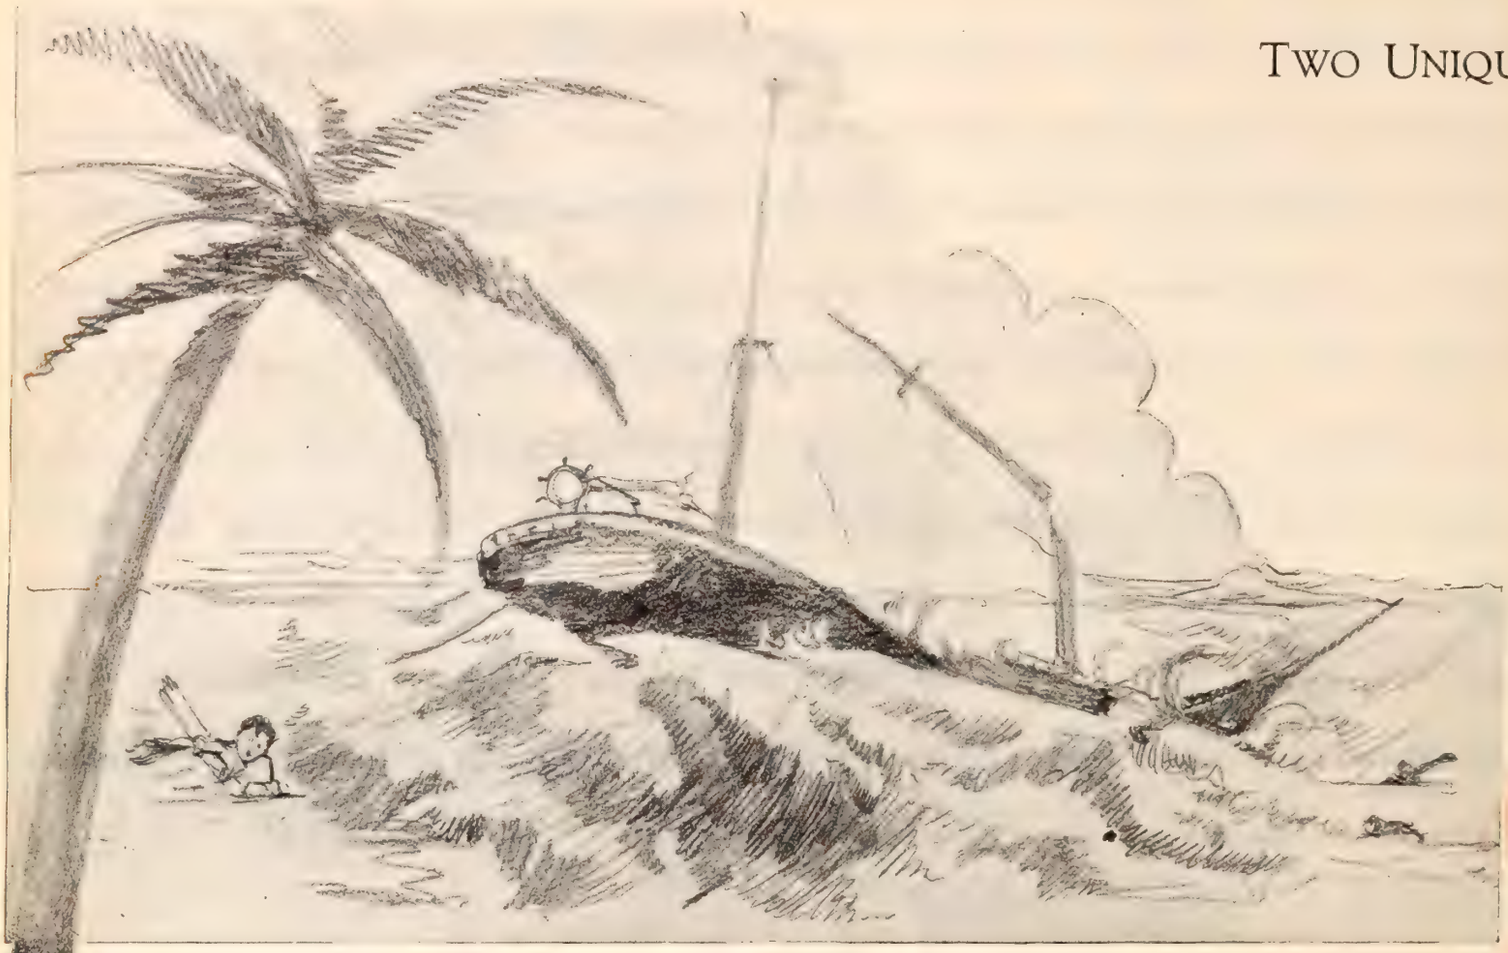
has the new day dawned for you?



¶ August 1, 1927. A new era in feature pictures. In short features. In the whole show. All because Paramount heeded the demand of this changing, modern world for a higher type of screen entertainment. Because Paramount geared up its production to the spirit of the times. Producing daring, "different" pictures—the only kind that will roll up big grosses and get back liberal returns on theatre investments today. Reports from the field prove it. You've read them. Has the new day dawned for you? Are you set for a year of unprecedented grosses with Paramount's 100% Program? Or are you trying to buck the tide of public demand by sticking to old-fashioned movies?

Move the Goods!

Are the "High-Ups" Fifty Years Behind the Times?

By William A. Johnston

I HAD an interview the other day with a man-higher-up-than-the-advertising-manager of a certain company.

And the interview may be of interest to a number of people—other men higher up, other advertising managers, sales managers, division managers, branch managers, salesmen, and finally the army of exhibitors who, many of them tell us, are not buying today, as they would and should, because they get so little definite information about pictures.

Quite a big subject, this: the buying and selling of merchandise running into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

Looks like these men-higher-up-than-the-advertising-managers could afford to do quite a bit of thinking about it.

I SHOWED the executive I refer to all the advertising on his pictures that had appeared in Motion Picture News since his company's selling season opened.

It was a sorry-looking display. It hit a few minor notes here and there on the keyboard of a large and ambitious program. But it told nothing, and it was sadly, flagrantly, misrepresentative of a well-planned lot of pictures upon which millions of dollars have been spent. It conveyed the impression that a trade paper was down in a schedule for a certain number of advertising pages and that for this reason only someone had picked out some plates to fill the space.

"Let's," I suggested, "put ourselves in the place of the buying exhibitor. What on earth does this advertising mean to him?"

"Here's a page on comedies, another on a newsreel, some scattering pages on Broadway openings, some more exceedingly optimistic but indefinite comparisons between your product and your competitors, etc. There are no facts about your program, its aggregate strength, its A series and B series of features, why and what story material, casts, directors were selected, etc., etc. When I was in Hollywood I heard your whole production story. It was impressive. But your exhibitor hasn't been in Hollywood, nor will he call at your office for a two-hour talk with you.

"How, therefore, is he to decide just what your program means to him or to his competitors? Who is going to tell him? How is he going to buy?"

* * * * *

THIS executive's defense was that his advertising to the exhibitor—via the trade paper—was limited by a budget.

And, in reply to my questions as to just what determined his advertising budget, he finally in good-natured candor admitted that it was wholly and especially designed to please the boss, who regarded all advertising budgets as a vague but irritating expense.

* * * * *

SO there, Mr. Exhibitor, is the reason why you get no information from this company about its pictures. You don't know why you should buy them for your public; and you are unable to tell your public why you did buy them—if ever you make up your mind to do so.

The same boss who okayed a production expense of many millions, who has an annual distribution cost of several millions more, doesn't believe in spending one cent on a dollar to tell you the facts—of why you should buy and how you can sell his pictures to your public.

An Editorial By William A. Johnston

He calls such service—an expense!

* * * * *

YOU will also be interested to know that too many other bosses in this business feel quite the same way about service to you on pictures. In fact, some are considerably more opposed to it than the one I mention.

You have perhaps been thinking right along that the almost negative advertising effort of the producer is the fault of the advertising manager.

The contrary is true. You can thank the advertising manager for such service as you do receive and in every instance he has asked an appropriation for more. He is "rarin to go" but his recommendations don't get past the head office. The head office, if it has any policy at all in advertising, has a mighty shortsighted or thoroughly misdirected one.

It certainly is an anomaly that in the one American industry in which advertising plays as vital a part as the goods themselves, there should exist an appreciation of advertising as childlike as that which disappeared from the whole industrial world a half century ago.

Either the advertising managers of the producing companies should be allowed to run their departments or else the bosses should go to an advertising school in which competent and unbiased men from other industrial fields would explain to them the proven facts of advertising as applied to merchandising.

ONE glaring trouble with Hollywood today is the fact that picture production is conferenced to death. Interminable conferences are taking the life blood out of pictures and sending the production cost up to the moon.

That seems also to be the trouble with New York.

All advertising effort goes into a conference, and then into committees of the whole—the whole industry. And advertising emerges, if at all, on crutches.

This conference business is going to lend itself to a lot of ridicule.

Too many cooks are spoiling the broth of this business.

Why not let the advertising managers go to work?

* * * * *

WE are facing right now a serious industrial crisis. Production has made a big and expensive effort. Theatre overhead is too high. There is much uncertainty—almost chaos, in fact. But there are goods to be moved—millions of dollars' worth of goods; and the salvation of producer, distributor and exhibitor depends upon their being moved.

Move them!

Move them in the one way they can be moved—not by a frenzied "bull" effort to ease a heavy burden off one pair of shoulders and on to another.

Move them with service

Information—so that the exhibitor can first buy intelligently and then tell his public what he has and why he is going to exhibit it.

There is no other sound, successful way.

Think of the public!

Inside Slants on the Industry

Pictures & People

The Mirrors of Filmdom

THE ten per cent salary cut is now officially a fiasco. Two companies, by the way, never even considered slashing salaries. One of them was ahead of the economy procession—'way ahead. It had already effected economies in the studio; in two months' time, the production chief cut expenses 25 per cent.

There was no ballyhoo about this; and there will be none. The company took the attitude that it did not want to put its competitors in a hole by showing that it had already adopted a real economy program while they were only talking about it.

This concern seems to have its production end well under control, and is going ahead, without blare of trumpets, to make good pictures.

"THE Bull in the Picture Shop" editorial is still bringing reactions. We note with interest that M-G-M is using the trade papers to advertise this to its salesmen: "As official contact between the motion picture theatre and the producer it is your duty to give exhibitors the lowdown on all pictures which you see before prints are delivered to them for playing. It helps them to promote the picture properly, and gives an idea of the possibilities in the release."

GEORGE K. SPOOR'S third dimension pictures will be seen shortly in the Roxy, it is stated on good authority. Back of this is an interesting story: one of Spoor's friends advised him not to film a dramatic photoplay as his first stereoscopic offering, because, said the friend, it would inevitably be compared with the finest flat-picture photoplays and probably to the disadvantage of the Spoor process. The friend thought it would be better to film a news event or a natural wonder like Niagara Falls. The cost would be less and the impression on audiences better. It is now reported that the first Spoor picture will be views of the Falls and perhaps other subjects of natural beauty. The argument is that films of this kind would fit better into the program of a big house.

TAMAR LANE comes to bat in his Film Mercury with some common sense views on studio management. "One man power is the only system for motion picture success," he declares, and writes straight to the point on this important subject:

"It has become a practice for the head office of producing organizations in the East to dictate the polity of the studios in the West. In many respects the idea is not to be ridiculed, in other respects it is.

"The salesmanagers and swivel chair executives in the home office are supposed to know what the public wants. Facts show that no one knows and, if they did, their advice would be worth so much a word. If a certain type of picture is successful the home office experts immediately wire the studio boss to make something similar. This they do, usually copying the original success. If the imitation by forced sales campaigns goes over, the home office does a lot of backslapping. The studio had nothing whatsoever to do with it.

"The studio executive should be permitted to use his own ideas. He should be boss—sole boss of the studio of which he is in charge. As it stands today most studio executives are figure-heads. If they possess ability they are not permitted to show it. Yet they are held accountable for every mistake, even though made under orders from New York.

"A salesmanager may have ideas and should be allowed to submit them, but it is doubtful whether the salesmanager knows it all. At least every idea he suggests carries an alibi—that alibi being the studio did not produce his idea right—in the event it is a flop. The studio executive has no alibi and can advance none, although his common sense may have shown him the idea was bad in the beginning.

"No salesmanager, no matter how clever he is, can sell what is not good and get away with it. A picture to be good must be produced well, and salesmanagers are not film producers. They can sell a good thing—but so can anyone else, for that matter.

"Most of the production fiascoes are caused by home office interference, too much butting into studio affairs of which they know little.

"Trace back into history and it will be found that it was the organizations that had one capable, yet supreme executive that made history. The old Ince company in the active days of Tom Ince, the Fine Arts company under D. W. Griffith, etc.

"THE chief executive in a studio should be king of his domain," continues Mr. Lane. "When he fails to deliver the goods he should abdicate. He should be given a free hand over his subjects. One boss—one principle—one system. A properly organized studio with efficient workers will succeed if presided over by a competent executive whose word is law and not a squawk, carrying no power behind it.

"The studio executive should be the final word in the making of the picture. Once a definite production program is scheduled he should be left to see that it is carried out. There should be no outside interference. He should be permitted to change this program from time to time if deemed wise and expedient, due to market conditions and in favor of the organization. He knows what is happening on this side of the continent and the other side does not.

"He should be permitted to add new production ideas if they are worthwhile and without having to get the indorsement of everyone in the organization. By the time he gets it

"The Road to Economy"

An Important Article

by SYDNEY S. COHEN

"A Frankenstein has been erected which threatens a great industry," Mr. Cohen declares, and tells why and how.

The well-known exhibitor leader points out evils in no uncertain terms; but he also suggests constructive remedies.

the idea may be obsolete because some other company has beaten him to the market. He should be the sole boss over directors, stars and their productions. He should be permitted to eliminate some of the temperamental children if they become unmanageable. In this way he may accomplish something, get a good working organization and the fact established that he IS boss."

LET'S hope that the economy pact at Hollywood will have practical results. It's a constructive program as it is mapped out, but, of course, it remains to be seen just what it will mean in fact.

We are glad to see that an institute of research is included. This is a matter which should have been given attention long ago, because it can bring very definite advances in technique. Months ago, Motion Picture News advocated such a step. We are glad to see that the people in Hollywood are coming around to the point where they are willing to line up with the practices of older established industries.

Any device or method that will contribute to the general good should be made available for all.

RICHARD WASHBURN CHILD, former Ambassador to Italy, is abroad on an important mission for Fox Movietone, we learn. He is aiding in arranging for the recording of famous diplomats and statesmen in several countries, among them, according to our understanding, Clemenceau and Lloyd George. The voices and personalities of these celebrities will thus be handed down to posterity, as well as shown to this generation.

Movietone has already recorded Mussolini, and the film voice of Il Duce is in New York now. Movietone has equally interesting plans for recording important personages in America.

AT least two important mergers are in the offing. But they'll probably mark time, until the Government's attitude toward the industry or the possibility of a Federal investigation is cleared up.

ACCORDING to a report from our Berlin Correspondent, Paul Davidson, one of the most notable personalities in the German film industry, has just died of heart failure, only 56 years of age. He had been ill for some months.

Davidson had generally been nicknamed "The father of the German film trade." And quite rightly so; for he was the first who, some years before the war, built modern motion picture theatres, he was one of the founders of Ufa, he built the first big German motion picture studio and he was the first to start film production on modern and big lines. Incidentally he discovered Lubitsch and Negri, and a score of other artists, to-day enjoying international fame, owe their first opening to Paul Davidson. Last year, Davidson had been production manager in the Ufa concern. He had resigned from his position some months ago, however, and had intended to go in for a big production scheme of his own again, as soon as his health was restored. Now all these plans have been cut short by his untimely death.

FREDDIE SCHADER has resigned as director of publicity and exploitation for West Coast Theatres, and will return to New York shortly. Broadway will be glad to see him back and give him a warm welcome.

UTMOST secrecy surrounds "Sunrise" at Fox. The one print in the east is securely stowed away in the vault, from which it can be removed only upon order from William Fox. Even casual reasoning, however, will show that Fox evidently considers that it has something unusual. The picture was costly—very costly—but Mr. Murnau's contract was renewed for a considerable period, against heavy competitive bidding. Those few persons who have seen it speak with the utmost enthusiasm of its artistry and merit. The question of "box-office" is another matter, however, and remains to be seen. Murnau is not likely ever to become a so-called commercial director, and there is little reason to suppose he has started here. The story is unique and the acting splendid, however, and perhaps "Sunrise" will prove a surprise commercially as well as artistically.

ALTHOUGH it is a splendid job in every way—or perhaps we should say because it is—we were disappointed in the ending of "The Way of All Flesh." We should have liked to see it end where the old man sits in the balcony of the concert hall, head bowed on arms on the railing. What came after was anti-climatic, added little, did not provide a happy ending, and was too much like a male version of "Stella Dallas" to be particularly happy.

LITTLE of it appears on the surface, but the talking picture field is in a good bit of a muddle over the patent situation. Both sound recording photographically on the film and the synchronization of records and film are involved in a maze of claims and counterclaims, so that even the experts admit frankly that they don't known precisely where anybody stands. At least one suit is now on the books, and other inventors holding older patents are marking time, waiting a suitable opportunity to test the validity of their claims.

It is not unlikely that the ultimate solution will be a patents pool, such as has been resorted to in the radio field, with each manufacturer cross-licensing the others. The situation as regards the use of American talking picture equipment abroad is even more involved as regards patents.

We may hope that this situation will be straightened out before long, because progress is being held back by it, in at least two instances with which we are familiar.

A FEMININE star in Hollywood is in a row with a producer because the latter is said to be insisting that she appear in an undressed silhouette scene for a production which, by the way, has been started and junked twice. The star's husband and the producer are also in a row over production ideas.

There's a problem for the anti-temperament clause of the Economy Pact.

A HOLLYWOOD scout tells us that there is nothing to the report that Sid Grauman will become a director of pictures. That was just a little joke of Joe Schenck's, says the Hollywood spy.

ANOTHER indication of the economy trend and its effect is contained in the new contract recently entered into by an independent producer and a national distributing organization. Last year he had unlimited control over his productions, and in almost every instance went way over the budget, not always delivering quality. This year his arbitrary methods will find slight play, for his new contract gives the releasing organization full control of story, cast, director, cost, editing, and whatnot. This business threatens to become businesslike in spite of itself.

PICTURE economy does not by any means necessarily involve loss of quality. Ingenuity will often save many dollars. When Ralph Ince was filming "Bigger Than Barnum's," he found that a regular circus wanted some $5,000 a day, added to which would be the cost of filling the seats with extras. So he hired a lot of circus acts, rented a tent and put on his own circus, advertising it generously as a free circus. The tent was jammed, the circus cost little and the crowd nothing. The secret of the whole thing, Ince says, was that he played fair with the crowd; he told them that he had "pulled a fast one" on them, but that he was going to give them a first class circus free. He did so, the crowd was good-natured about it, he got his scenes—and they were possibly better than they would have been with an audience of professional extras.

"Bull in Picture Shop" Starts Lively Controversy

Exhibitors Continue to Criticize Lack of Information on Pictures; Salesman Comes to Defen se of His Group in Industry

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON'S recent editorial "The Bull in the Picture Shop" continues to arouse lively discussion. More than any editorial printed in recent years, "The Bull in the Picture Shop" has won the approval of exhibitors, and comments are still coming in in large volume. In parallel columns Motion Picture News prints below the opinions of an exhibitor and a salesman, selecting these as typical of the controversy aroused:

The Exhibitor's Viewpoint

My dear Mr. Johnston:

I read your editorial and I approve it. I wish the other trade papers would take up this same line of argument. I believe that the theatre owners of America have more to lose by the mismanagement of the big producing companies and the way the business is run than any other business in the world.

It seems to me that ability does not count with the big producing companies; even the press matter that is sent out with pictures. It gives you advice on how to exploit a picture but it doesn't tell you anything about the picture itself. Your story on the salesman coming around to sell you pictures is exactly as you say. They don't know anything about it, only that they have to get more money for the picture.

I have just completed a theatre, 2,000 capacity, in the suburbs of Providence, and I am probably the only theatre owner who has his own broadcast station, 100 watts, 225 meters; and when I want to talk about my show in the theatre the press sheets do not make it clear enough, so I must see the show first before I talk about it.

I wish you would drive your stories home as those who read them certainly appreciate them, and in what you say about the chain theatres you are absolutely right. I don't know of anything under the sun that will kill our theatres quicker than the chain theatres managed by long-distance telephone and just force the individual theatre owner to the wall. The producers that run theatres are killing the goose that has laid the golden egg, and eventually they will know that they are responsible for all the ills of the industry.

Hoping that you will continue the good work and tell the truth about the industry as you have in the past, I remain,

Yours very truly,
Jacob Conn,
Olympia Theatre,
Providence, R. I.

The Salesman's Viewpoint

My dear Mr. Johnston:

I got quite a "kick" out of the "Echoes of the Bull in the Picture Shop." You published a letter from a sales manager, and an echo from a big chain exhibitor as well as an echo from an independent exhibitor. All of which were very interesting reading.

For fear someone else will not do so, I am going to rise up in defense of the salesman that Mr. F. C. Shugert, of Columbus, O., took such a slap at.

As to national conventions, I believe that has been covered very thoroughly by yourself and Mr. Grainger, so I will pass that, but I can't let Mr. Shugert get away with that stuff.

The big exhibitor, as well as the small exhibitor, is buying stars and directors now and has been for several years. Is it necessary for a salesman to sit down and go through the stories of about seventy pictures with an exhibitor who claims to know more about a salesman's product (he admits it) than the salesman knows himself? That would be a foolish waste of both the exhibitor's and the salesman's time.

Does an exhibitor today have to know any more than the type of story that Reginald

Denny, Lon Chaney, Lewis Stone, John Gilbert, Mary Pickford, Tom Meighan, Doug Fairbanks and dozens of others I could mention, are making, in order to buy them?

These pictures should sell themselves with no need of a salesman taking all day telling an exhibitor beautiful stories. Besides, you know there are some men who cannot tell a story and get it over, while others can entertain you with a poor story.

A salesman is not a publicity man. That's another line. Besides, if a salesman, after warming his shins for a couple of hours (perhaps a couple of days or weeks), waiting to see the booker or buyer for a chain, should offer a suggestion as to how to put a picture over, the booker for the chain would think the salesman was trying to tell him how to run his theatres. That goes also for most of the independent theatre owners.

That bunk about "Knocking Them Cold in Noo Yark" and "A Veritable Clean Up at the Box-Office," "Whiz Bangs," and what not, is relegated to the brush heap by salesmen who know their onions. If a salesman wants to get thrown out of an office just let him try to offer some of these so-called showmen suggestions. I tried it once and the showman said to me these few words: "If you know so damned much about how to run a show, why in hell are you selling pictures?" Since that experience I am very careful what I say regarding any suggestions.

I am not in any sense of the word criticizing Mr. Shugert, for I never met the gentleman. I just enjoyed what he had to say about the salesman he has had call on him, and thought I would retaliate in a friendly manner by giving the experience of a man who has acted in pictures, operated several picture theatres, sold film and managed offices. And, after doing all this, is still selling pictures.

I will guarantee Mr. Shugert that if any salesman that calls on him to sell pictures can get a contract out of him by exposing an ace in the hole, he sure will expose it, for the salesman is contract-hungry right now.

Can't understand what kind of a salesman does not read MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Don't see how he knows what his opposition is offering the exhibitor.

Hoping everyone will take this "echo" in the spirit in which it is intended, "with malice toward none," I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

The Week in Review: By Wm. A. Johnston

AN article in Lichtbildbuehne, leading German trade paper, indicates that the movement for contingents, inaugurated by Germany, is proving a boomerang in the sense that several other countries with whom she trades are considering or have already passed similar legislation. The article decries tariff walls and barriers to the free exchange of films at a time when the European trend is toward free trade.

The writer concludes that Germany is justified in having a contingent, because of the large number of persons dependent upon the industry, the splendid studios and the large amount of money invested; the situation in England, with less highly developed production resources, is regarded differently; France was once a world film power and is justified in taking measures to restore that position.

Similar action in countries having no highly developed industry to maintain is decried, however, and Roumania, Turkey, Austria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia are mentioned in this respect. Says the writer:

"For all of these instances (at the time of an international conference) there is not the slightest economic foundation."

Ufa May Open Exchanges Here

Dr. Rudolph Becker to Remain Here to Survey Field; Ludwig Klitzch Guest of Honor at Luncheon

OPENING of a new chain of exchanges throughout the United States to distribute German and perhaps British pictures by Ufa is understood to be a serious possibility in the near future. Dr. Rudolph Becker, foreign sales manager of Ufa, is now in New York in company with Ludwig Klitzsch, Ufa executive, president of the Association of the German Film Industry and president and general manager of the August Scherl Publishing Company of Berlin.

Klitzsch is returning to Germany in a few days, but Dr. Becker will remain in the U. S. for about a month, making a survey of the situation and of possibilities in this market. The report has not been denied.

The exchanges would be principally to handle Ufa product, but there is a possibility that a number of outstanding British productions would also be handled here, in line with the tendency in Europe toward German-French-British commercial alliances.

A similar plan was under consideration two or thre years ago, but at that time it was thought that adequate representation could be obtained here by releasing through American companies.

A. Rosenthal, chief editor of film departments of all of the Scherl publications (now in control of Ufa), in a current article in Kine Weekly of England points out that co-operation betwen British and German companies is the only way in which a start can be made toward competing with America. He also states that more recognition of European product in the U. S. will be necessary if America is to retain her foothold abroad. He points out that with leading industrialists in control of Ufa the company is in a far stronger position to negotiate with American companies than before.

Ludwig Klitzsch was the guest of honor at a luncheon given by Will H. Hays at the Ritz Carlton hotel in New York City on Wednesday, with diplomats, government officials and leading film executives in attendance.

Mr. Hays in his talk pleaded for an open market in motion picture distribution, characterizing trade barriers against films as no more proper than barriers against books, operas or music.

"As for America," he said, "we want the best motion pictures that are available. If they are made in Hollywood, all well and good, but if they are made in Germany, all well and good again. . . . We welcome foreign productions that meet the standards of our audiences. There will always be room for them."

Mr. Klitzsch, in his reply, agreed in principle with Mr. Hays as regards free trade in films, but implied that the present state of the German industry made it impractical. He said:

"To start with, the situation of the German film industry is at present not an easy one. There are not enough theatres in order to allow to take full advantage of the market possibilities of the film in my home country. . . . I want to point to the fact that in Germany with a population of almost seventy millions there are only 3600 film theatres, while in the United States with a population of one hundred and twenty millions are said to be about 16,000 film theatres. . . . We do not have either as complete an organization for the distribution of the German film in the world market as you have in America. Therefore, we believe that for the time being we cannot forego a certain protection of our industry."

Mr. Klitzsch particularly stressed the importance of reciprocity, saying that he felt that "provisions should be made that in the future good German films can be as easily released in America as good American films are released in Germany today.

British Desirous of Using Foreign Producers

PARLIAMENT may expect opposition in its attempt to prevent British film manufacturers from employing foreign producers to assist the British in production, reports from London indicate.

The committee's action in barring the use of foreign producers to aid in the making of British films has resulted in a spirited protest from the British film producers, who declare that for a period of three years at least the English studios should be the training ground for the development of British producers under the guidance of those from other lands who have a reputation of established ability. The British producers say that they do not want the privilege as a permanent one but are anxious to make use of the opportunities that skill and experience offer.

Peace Pact Pledges Economy

All Branches in Harmony Meeting Declare They Will Cooperate in Cutting Production Expense

COMPLETE harmony is now in the immediate offing as the result of the series of conferences held among producers, stars, directors, writers and technicians. The last of these peace sessions was held at a general meeting of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences at the Biltmore Hotel in Los Angeles on July 29th.

There are to be no slashes in salaries as proposed at one time. There is to be a general economy move in other directions, with complete cooperation and collaboration of all parties that will prohibit the necessity for salary cuts. Actors will refrain from unreasonable displays of temperament; writers promise more careful and efficient preparation of scripts; directors pledged the producers' problems as their own and technicians will carry into effect all reforms that will make for a reduction in overhead expense.

The final peace session was presided over by Douglas Fairbanks with 250 in attendance. Other speakers were Cecil B. De Mille, Conrad Nagel, Fred Niblo, Waldemar Young and James Mitchell Leisen.

Cecil B. De Mille was spokesman for the producers. He made the announcement that the proposed cut in salaries had been abandoned because of a conviction that the necessary economy could be effected in some other manner. He announced pledges of various branches of the industry aiming at economy. He also announced that the producers' branch of the Academy had pledged its members to promote and support an institute of research to aid in technical and artistic advancement.

Mr. De Mille pledged a central clearing house for story material wherein will be kept synopses available to all of story material on hand in studios, as well as data pertaining to sets and other matters.

Conrad Nagel, on behalf of the players, promised that in future there would be no unreasonable or unnecessary display of temperament that makes for delay in the production of pictures and the consequent running up of expenses.

For the directors Fred Niblo said they had a complete understanding of the producers' problems which they would consider as their own and that they would minimize excess footage due to unnecessary overshooting of scenes.

Two New York Charters Granted M. P. Firms

Motion picture companies incorporating at Albany in New York state during the past week included the following: Joelson-Suchman Enterprises, $1,000,000, Harry Suchman, Fred Berger, Jack Rosenthal, New York City; Fields & Andrews, Inc., capitalization not specified, Lew M. Fields, Lyle D. Andrews, Jacob Ginsburgh, New York City.

G. E. Sound Film Device to Be Sold Theatres Direct

C. W. Stone, General Executive, Placed in Charge; R. C. A. and Westinghouse Also Involved

AS intimated several months ago, the Photophone, the synchronized sound film device developed by General Electric, will be sold direct to theatres throughout the country, with the Radio Corporation of America in charge of sales and Westinghouse involved in the installations and equipment. If this works out as expected, exhibitors everywhere will have available to them synchronized music scores, recorded by the best orchestras obtainable, on all features of any importance, from any company.

C. W. Stone, an important G. E. executive, has been placed in charge of the commercial development of this idea, and a few months will find the plan in full operation. Apparatus is already being manufactured in commercial quantities, and the cost of installation, it is promised, will be low. The photophone photographs the sound record directly on the film, using no auxiliary phonograph apparatus.

The group will concentrate on music scores to accompany films rather than musical acts and novelties. These are not made at the time of production, as are musical acts, but can be recorded at any time by merely screening a print at a fixed speed while an orchestra plays the score.

The chief problem to date has been the difficulty of any one company furnishing an exhibitor with a sufficient volume of sound film product to justify the installation expense. The new group, being tied up with no single film organization, will be prepared to record synchronized scores for features from all companies who will cooperate to the extent of furnishing a print for screening. Thus even the smallest theatre will be able to present its features from all sources with a high class musical accompaniment.

Vatican Attack Denied

Criticism of U. S. Films Is Not Official View of Pope

THE Vatican was not responsible for the recent attack on American films, according to a cablegram from the Rome correspondent of National Catholic Welfare Conference, which "The Catholic News" prints. According to the story in "The Catholic News" the attack in "The Observatore Romano," semi-official organ of the Vatican, was not an editorial, but a signed contribution by "one of the most recent and authoritative collaborators" of the publication.

"The Catholic News" prints as follows:

"It may even be said authoritatively that the Vatican itself—to which the sentiments of the article were unqualifiedly credited by prominent secular papers in America both in news report and editorial—while it deplores all distribution and showing of immoral and frivolous motion pictures, does not approve of the writer's general criticism of the United States," the cable states.

"It is noteworthy that it remained for the American secular papers to interpret the article as an editorial and a Vatican expression. The Italian press, recognizing the article for what it was, let it pass without reprinting or comment.

"As a matter of fact, the article was written primarily to congratulate a project just announced for the production in Belgium of instructive documentary films. Nothing of this part was mentioned by the American secular papers. It was from this beginning that the writer deviated to criticize American motion pictures, asserting that American film companies are sending to Europe 'lethal poison.' He then brought in the subject of American civilization in these words, which are those quoted by journals in the United States:

" 'America is a very great country which, possessing superiority in dollars, believes it also possesses superiority of mind. Americans build monster palaces which scrape the sky, but when America was unknown, we had already built our cathedrals to raise ourselves to Heaven. Old Europe, whose soil is made up of the glorious dust of ten civilizations, cannot renounce the past to accept with closed eyes the improvised civilization beyond the ocean.'

"The article concluded by warning against what the writer termed the 'occidental danger.' "

"Sadie Thompson" Is Half Completed

"Sadie Thompson," the second Gloria Swanson production for United Artists release, is half finished, an announcement from the star to the United Artists home office reads. Simultaneously Miss Swanson listed the entire production personnel and cast of her picture.

Raoul Walsh, director and scenarist of the Swanson film, also plays the role of a marine sergeant in the picture, while others in this screen version of the W. Somerset Maugham story are Lionel Barrymore, Blanche Friderici, Jim Marcus, Charles Lane, Florence Midgeley and Will Stanton.

George Barnes and Thomas Branigan are cameramen for "Sadie Thompson" and William Tummel is assistant director. The sets for the production are the work of William Cameron Menzies, general art director of Joseph M. Schenck productions.

Block Booking Discus'd Conn. M.P.T.O. Meet

AT a conference session of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association of Connecticut at New Haven last Sunday, block booking was discussed at some length and while it is understood that no immediate action was taken, the association is said to have decided to adopt a policy of watching further developments before another session is held.

Standard contracts now in force came in for criticism at the hands of Wesley A. Sturges, professor at Yale University, who is making an analysis of the negotiable relations of exhibitors and distributors, which was declared to be inequitable.

Edward G. Levy, secretary of the association, led a discussion of the block booking plan.

May Import Films Free of Duty into Mexcio

Duty-free importation into Mexico of motion picture films long enough for them to be shown is permitted under a decree issued by the Mexican Government last week, according to a cable just received at the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., from Acting Commercial Attache George Wythe, at Mexico City.

The decree provides that printed motion picture films may be imported free of duty through the Northern and Southern frontiers of Mexico, provided they are re-exported within three days.

Cleveland's Zoning Plan Up for Ratification

The zoning plan of Cleveland, which has held up buying of new fall product, has been completed to the satisfaction of local exhibitors and the members of the local Film Board of Trade. It is now in the hands of the members of the Hays organization for ratification. Local committees have been working on the plan for the past three months.

Katterjohn Made Head of New P. F. L. Department

Monte Katerjohn, veteran scenarist, has been placed in charge of a new department at the Paramount Hollywood studios, with the general title "editorial development work." His duty will be to develop screen originals and new talent for their creation for such Paramount stars as, from the special nature of their talents, need original stories for their vehicles.

Mulrooney United Artists Foreign Sales Manager

Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president and general manager of foreign distribution for United Artists, has appointed Thomas Patrick Mulrooney foreign sales manager of the corporation. Mr. Mulrooney joined United Artists four years ago and for the past two years has been assistant sales manager. As yet he has received no assignment.

Protection War Looms Over U. S.

New Demands of First-Runs in Several Territories Make Booking Blockade More Solid

DEMANDS for new protection rights on first-runs by big houses and circuits have precipitated a serious situation in several territories, and are making the booking blockade even more solid than it has been previously.

With exhibitors holding back on bookings, as a general rule, throughout the country, the protection demands in some territories are more drastic than ever before.

Three important zones of warfare over protection came to light this week:

Chicago, where Balaban & Katz are demanding new long-distance protection in signing 1927-28 contracts for products; on the West Coast, where the controversy is waxing hot, and in the Kansas City territory, where demands are being made over those already in existence.

A new phase in the problem in Chicago came to light when it was learned Balaban and Katz will seek protection over entire counties. As an example of the far reaching effect of this, pictures booked into Aurora would have protection over four surrounding counties, with the exception of a few towns which this concern lists.

The situation has the exchange managers considerably up in the air. They contend that with the hold Balaban and Katz have throughout the territory that organization will not pay higher rentals even if given the protection they seek. Exhibitors in the smaller towns, on the other hand, contend that decreased rentals should obtain because the drawing power of the pictures in their houses would be considerably lessened.

Harold B. Franklin, president and general manager of West Coast Theatres out in Los Angeles, declares that insufficient protection has resulted in the establishment of more 15 cent houses in Los Angeles county than ever before.

In part Franklin said:

"Proper clearance for each grade of motion picture theatre is essential if successful exhibition is to be maintained. Every exhibitor who is fair must in the final analysis approve the idea that the theatres which charge high prices of admission are entitled to proper clearance over theatres which charge less. Anyone who thinks otherwise is looking for a personal advantage at the expense of his fellow exhibitor, who bears the burden of higher film rentals.

"Is it fair to expect a 15 cent house to run pictures at the same time or close on the heels of a house that has a 25 cent admission? And this applies all along up the line. The fellow who is looking for a free ride is never the one who contributed anything that is constructive.

"Film rental is determined by gross business and gross business is determined by the admission charged, and the exhibitor who pays the higher film rental is entitled to protection. If he doesn't get it, eventually he cannot continue to pay big film rentals because his admission prices cannot continue in the face of unfair competition. And when exhibitors cannot continue to pay big film rentals, producers cannot spend the money to make big pictures, and when that time comes the public will begin to lose interest in motion pictures and all will suffer."

In the Kansas City territory the larger first run houses in Kansas City are attempting to obtain new protection rights on first-run pictures. These houses, which now have a 60 day protection against the suburban theatres of Kansas City, are seeking thirty days' protection against all theatres within a radius of sixty miles of the city, which would include Kansas City, Kans., a city of 135,000 population.

The contention of the smaller town theatre owners is that it has been their money that built concrete highways to Kansas City and made it possible for thousands of out-of-town patrons to attend theatres in Kansas City. To be cut off entirely from the current first runs which receive big advertising campaigns in Kansas City would kill the business of the little fellows, they say.

Universal Has Twenty Stories for Next Year

UNIVERSAL has 20 Jewel pictures bought and most of them in the hands of adaptors and scenarists who are grooming them for the 1928-29 schedule.

Three stories bought this week were "The Worm Turns," by Ward Russell; "Stop That Man," play by George V. Hobart, and "Phyllis of the Follies," by Arthur Gregor. Universal last week acquired "The Charlatan," by Leonard Praskins and Ernest Pascal. On next year's program will be a story of Leif the Lucky; "The Last Warning," play by T. F. Fallon; "Give and Take," by Aaron Hoffman; "The Muzzle," by Peter B. Kyne; "The Best Policy," by Edwin Justus Mayer; "The Broadway Romance," by Nell Martin; "The Burden," by Elsa Ledinger; "The Five Frankfurters," European play; "Bill Smith, M. D.," "Polish Blood," "The Stolen Lady," by William Dudley Pelley; "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" an original; "Grease Paint," "It Can Be Done," by Carl Laemmle, Jr.; "Justice," the play by John Galsworthy and "Blister Jones," by John Taintor Foote.

Terra, German Concern, to Be Developed

AN important new development in the German film industry is foreshadowed in the report from our Berlin correspondent of a tie-up between the I. G. Farben Trust and Ullstein, a large newspaper group, to finance an increased capitalization of Terra Films, already controlled by Ullstein.

The I. G. Farben interests include the Agfa raw film plant, and Ullstein owns some of the most popular newspapers in Germany, enjoying strong political influence. It is expected, therefore, that Terra, already well-known, will now be developed to occupy a leading position in the German industry.

Minneapolis' Carnival War Breaks Out Afresh

Minneapolis' war on the carnival nuisance broke out in another form last week when aldermen took steps to bar a merry-go-round which applied for a license in connection with Barnum and Bailey-Ringling Bros.' Circus. Alderman John Peterson proposed an ordinance forbidding the operation of merry-god-rounds, ferris wheels and aerial ships in Minneapolis. The ordinance was referred to the committee on ordinances and legislation, and in the meantime the circus will be permitted to operate the merry-go-round as it has done in years past. Sentiment against the carnival and the various carnival amusement devices was crystallized in Minneapolis a few weeks ago when four persons were injured in a ferris wheel accident within the city limits.

"Wings" Premiere Again Postponed to August 16

Rumors of Deal Between Delft and F. and R.

Rumors that the Delft Theatres, Inc., operating in Marquette, Munising and Eseanaba, Minnesota, will be taken over by Finkelstein and Ruben have been denied by H. S. Gallup, general manager for Delft.

Wesco Planning Ten New Houses Yearly

Present Large Holdings Will Be Increased Under Franklin Regime

WESCO, with its two operating companies, West Coast Theatres and West Coast Pacific Northwest Theatres, is planning to build ten theatres a year in Pacific Seaboard states, according to Frank R. Wilson, who just arrived from the Pacific Northwest. This is the plan proposed by Harold B. Franklin, president and general manager of the circuit.

Wilson, a director of Wesco, aided in consolidating in the Wesco holdings, houses of Pacific Northwest Theatres, which he controlled as president of the parent company, North American Theatres. The latter organization remains intact under the new pooling arrangement.

The Wesco chain now includes about 260 theatres in California, Oregon, Washington and Montana, and is about to enter the Arizona territory. These houses dominate the industry in 74 cities in Pacific States.

In his message Mr. Wilson metes out the highest praise to Harold B. Franklin for his splendid management since assuming control of the circuit. He says the houses in the chain are enjoying considerably better business this year as the result of the new management. Franklin has devoted much of his time to the elimination of deadwood and effecting economies and new policies.

No definite plan has yet been outlined for the building of the ten new houses yearly. They will be erected, as, in the opinion of Franklin, they are considered expedient, but it is expected the ten houses a year program on an average will be maintained.

Franklin recently announced six new houses for the chain, including one of $500,000 for Phoenix, Arizona. This will be the first entrance of Wesco in that territory.

Regarding the Pacific Northwest houses, with which he is more familiar, Mr. Wilson said business has been considerably improved with the larger attractions provided through the combined management and the Fanchon & Marco presentations. Bank failures caused some reverses in February in the Northwest, but since then business has always been on the improve.

Paramount News Is Here

First Release of New Topical Reel Shown; Initial Subjects on P. F. L. Short Line-up Also Have Premiere

THIS week marked the commencement of release by the Paramount Famous-Lasky short feature department of Paramount News and the first of the Paramount short feature comedies. The first issue of the News opens with a short dedication to the public written by Emanuel Cohen, the editor, and includes special news features treated from a novel angle and a thrilling novelty showing a flaming airplane falling through the air, with the aviator escaping in a parachute.

The release of this first issue of Paramount News marks the realization of a dream of many years' standing on the part of Mr. Cohen, who was a pioneer in the newsreel field. When he was offered the editorship of Paramount News, with unlimited resources at his command, he saw an opportunity to carry out plans which he believed would make for greater perfection of newsreel making, and accepted.

A staff of cameramen, veterans all, most of whom had received their training under the tutelage of Mr. Cohen, foregathered at the Paramount headquarters early in April and without loss of time proceeded to cover all events just as though making up the twice-weekly release, though the official release date of the first issue was scheduled four months ahead. But no chances were taken. Consequently no confusion was evident in the preparation of the first official release.

"Paramount News is new only in the sense that distribution has just been started. From the angle of its component units it is as old as any established reel in the same classification," states Mr. Cohen.

Stationed throughout the world are 150 established offices manned by camera men who have covered world events over a period of years. In New York City is a newly erected laboratory, a four-story building, which houses the editorial and technical staff. It is so laid out that there is absolutely no lost motion from the time the negative is received until the finished print is delivered to the truck which bears it away. The negative is received on the first floor, passed to the second floor by means of a dumbwaiter; on the second floor are the developing rooms and the drums for drying the film. Another dumbwaiter carries the negative to the third floor on which is located the assembling rooms, editorial staff and the projection room. Here the film is put together under direction of the make-up editor and titles are inserted.

Back to the first floor goes the negative where the prints are made. A special printing machine turns out prints faster than was possible heretofore; it is only one more step to transfer the complete prints to the writing vehicles of transportation. On the fourth floor is the production department.

Exclusively devoted to the development and printing of Paramount News, the laboratory is capable of turning out a total of 2,000,000 feet of film per week. Furthermore a finished print may be had 25 minutes after the negative has been received.

Other releases scheduled for distribution on August 1 were an Edward Everett Horton comedy in two reels titled "No Publicity" and "Sealing Whacks," a Krazy Kat one-reel cartoon. On August 6 will be released the first Paramount two-reel dramatic subject titled "The Elegy" and an Inkwell Imps one-reel cartoon comedy "Koko Plays Pool."

Param't Closes Branch Office in Louisville

AN entirely unexpected development in exchange circles of Louisville, Ky., last week was the decision of Paramount Famous-Lasky to close the company's branch office. The closing went into effect on Saturday, July 30.

The exhibitors formerly served out of the Louisville exchange will hereafter be served out of the branch offices in St. Louis, Indianapolis and Cincinnati. Paramount's lease on the Louisville quarters has eight more years to go.

Levine to Concentrate on Serial Production

Nat Levine announces that for the next two years he will devote his time to the production of serials to be known by the trade mark of Mascot Serials. Four serials are planned for the season of 1928-29. "The Isle of Sunken Gold," starring Anita Stewart, is the first chapter-play ready for distribution in the fall. Featured in this production are "Duke" Kohanamoku, Bruce Gordon, Evangeline Russell, Alfred Sabato, Emmett Wagner. The direction is by Harry Webb.

The second Levine serial to be produced and released right after "The Isle of Sunken Gold" is "Heroes of the Wild," with Jack Hoxie, "White Fury," a horse, and "Tornado," a German police dog. The direction is also by Harry Webb.

Rogers to Specialize in Reviving Old Films

The favorable reception accorded "Passion," for which Tiffany Productions is contracting bookings, has induced Louis T. Rogers, who now owns "Passion," to secure the rights to revive three more former screen successes, the titles of which he will announce when the releasing arrangements have been completed.

Tiffany has already booked the German film for Pantages circuit and several other circuits and houses. Mr. Rogers says he will continue to handle new productions, but will also specialize in reviving the old films that are worth while.

"Straight Shooting" Set for October 16

"Straight Shooting," the first Ted Wells Western for Universal, will be released on October 16 instead of in February, as previously planned.

"Old Ironsides" Opens for Runs in Seven Cities

"Old Ironsides" will open indefinite engagements soon in seven cities. The Cruze film will open at the New Detroit Opera House on August 14; at the Nixon Theatre, Pittsburgh, on August 15; at the Shubert Theatre, Newark, on August 21; at Ford's Grand Opera House, Baltimore, on August 22; at the Auditorium, Sacramento, California, on August 14; at the American Theatre in St. Louis on September 4, and at the Lyceum Theatre in Patterson, September 11. Showings will be at theatrical prices on a two-a-day schedule.

Plans are being made for exhibition of "Wings" in the Tremont Theatre in Boston on November 14, the Aldine Theatre in Philadelphia on October 1, and at an unannounced theatre in Chicago about November 1.

Exhibitor Seeks to Stop Public Entertainments

As a test case for the Motion Picture Owners' Association of Utah, George Beard of Coalville, owner of the Opera House there, has filed suit in the Summit country third district court, seeking to enjoin the school board of that city from allowing the student body to compete with the opera house by exhibition of movies and staging of public entertainments on school premises for profit.

The case is based on a section of the 1923 session laws, which measure is to the effect that all boards of education are authorized to permit public school buildings to be used for any purpose as long as it does not interfere with school purposes, providing that the public school houses shall not be used for commercial purposes.

Western Canada Becomes Producing Center

Quota Discussion in Great Britain Prompts Many New Projects for Dominion Films

WESTERN Canada has become the stamping ground of various moving picture enterprises, due largely to an agitation for films made in the British Empire. The quota discussion in Great Britain has had an influence on the situation, and there are other minor factors.

One of the outstanding projects is that of the Lions' Gate Cinema Studios, of Vancouver, B. C., which is identified as the First National Cinema Studios Syndicate. This company recently purchased studio property in West Vancouver.

A British film producing syndicate has been busy in Victoria, B. C., where the rate-payers have voted in favor of municipal support for the venture to the extent of $200,000, providing English distributors and exhibitors provide $400,000. This is the Fleming organization.

Matheson Lang interests in London, England, have secured an option on the magnificent Dunsmuir residence and gardens at Victoria, B. C., for moving picture purposes. Representatives of Matheson Lang declare that this company is privately controlled and financed.

The Barnes Calgary Film Producing Company has been organized at Calgary, Alberta, with the backing of Al. G. Barnes, circus proprietor of California, and announcement is made that the Barnes film producing organization of California would be transferred to Calgary. It is stated that Barnes and his associates have $10,000,000 for the Calgary project.

At the Canadian National Park, Banff, near Calgary, a producing unit of the Fox Film Corporation, with Olive Borden as the star, has been busy for weeks on new pictures.

In Eastern Canada, Thunder Bay Films, Limited, has made its bow at Fort William, Ontario, as a Canadian producing enterprise with a capitalization of $500,000, a stock issue to be floated publicly.

At Toronto, the Exclusive Canadian Film Company, Limited, is reported to be making a feature called "Destiny." Lorraine Desbrooke is the leading player. Emanuel Restino is the promoter of this concern.

Alabama Fears New Bill

Legislature Now Considering Measure Aiming at Sunday Closing

THE Alabama Legislature, with a record for passing more freak measures than any previous session of the General Assembly, is now considering a Sunday closing measure. Primarily this measure strikes at baseball and motion pictures. It prohibits any form of Sunday amusement where admission is charged.

The proposed legislation seems to strike particularly at Montgomery and Mobile, which are the only two cities in the state where Sunday shows are now held, but it would hit baseball generally.

According to the bill proposed it would be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to carry on any picture show, vaudeville or other amusement where an admission fee is charged, and it would be unlawful for any person to play baseball, football or golf, or to engage in any pugilistic or wrestling contest or exhibition where an admission fee is charged on Sunday.

The penalties prescribed for such an offense would be a fine upon conviction of not less than $100, nor more than $500, or by imprisonment for not less than six months at hard labor, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The film footage tax bill is another measure now pending. It has been in committee for some time. The new Sunday closing bill has been referred to the committee on Revision of Laws.

With but ten more working days the General Assembly may not be able to put through these measures. Stern opposition has met the film footage tax bill, and sentiment in Mobile and Montgomery is strongly opposed to the proposed Sunday closing bill.

:: "The Check-Up" ::

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who consider it "Fair"; the third, the number who consider it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who consider it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

Key City Reports

New York City

CONTINUANCE of hot weather was not without its effect at the Broadway picture palaces last week, though no one was complaining heavily. The slump has been noticeable, but is considered slight in comparison with years past, when very poor business was accepted as inevitable.

The Capitol showed such good returns on "Twelve Miles Out" that the picture was held over for this week. Gilbert is always a strong draw at this house.

Roxy did not fare so well with "Paid to Love," which was pretty well panned, and the gross fell off materially.

Business at the Paramount was not exceptional on "Manpower," although the star showed fair drawing power.

With two other Jannings pictures on Broadway, the Strand showed "Tartuffe," made in Germany more than a year ago. Business was fair but failed to build much during the week, with picture not considered exceptional.

The Rialto is still doing better than good business on "The Way of All Flesh," and while conditions brought the gross down last week there is no reason to believe the film is slipping, and it will probably be good for many weeks more.

"Camille" at the Rivoli is tapering off, and the announcement of "Topsy and Eva" failed to stimulate trade here as hoped.

The two-dollar pictures are gradually declining, "Seventh Heaven" alone showing an appreciable gain. The Colony is closed until Universal reopens it.

San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO'S downtown business was considered brisk by all managers and a big surprise was in store for the St. Francis Theatre patrons and management for the patrons did not expect such a popular picture in "The Way of All Flesh" and the management did not intend to show it a third time. For the first time in the history of San Francisco theatricals has a motion picture in its second week done such an improved business that it has been decided to hold it a third week after extensive preparations for weeks were made to present another picture, "Beau Geste" for a few weeks. The billboards have "Beau Geste" signs on them and it was advertised in the papers.

A. M. Bowles, general director of West Coast Theatres, Inc., here, and Herman Webber, Pacific Coast representative for Paramount pictures conferred and decided on the move in spite of the exploitation of "Beau Geste." "The Way of All Flesh" opened to a mediocre audience, but it immediately seemed to boom up for it was not many days before the theatre was crowded, as all told their friends. This picture, therefore, has a unique honor, being the first in this city to be held for a third week after money was spent on another picture. The audience went wild over the acting and stood outside to wait for seats.

the California Theatre, did fairly well the second week, but not as expected, for the audience the first week stated it was not up to the book, itself. "The Callahans and Murphys" as shown at the Granada Theatre, not only drew crowds, but pleased them to a great extent. This picture, together with the Fanchon & Marco "Bathing Beauty Revue," attracted many.

"Running Wild" as shown at the Loew's Warfield Theatre, together with "The Glorias," a European dancing team, attracted many to this house and more than filled it. The audience liking comedy. "The Little Adventuress," a comedy drama, shown at The Golden Gate Theatre, seemed to please the audiences, used in conjunction with the ordinary vaudeville. "The Country Beyond," together with the vaudeville at the Pantages Theatre, also did well and packed the houses.

"Dude Cowboy" together with fillers did especially well at the Union Square Theatre, shown with vaudeville. In the residential houses, "Special Delivery," shown at the Coliseum did exceptionally well as did "Down The Stretch" at the Wigwam Theatre, which pleased the audience together with the musical comedy, "My Night Club Girl." "The Winning of Barbara Worth" at the Majestic Theatre drew more crowds than expected.

Cleveland

COOL weather, cool theatres and good attractions combined to make last week's business satisfactory at the downtown houses. Suburban houses continue to report business slow due to a large rate of unemployment.

"The Big Parade" continued to keep a long line in front of the Stillman box office during the second week of its first popular priced local engagement. It is being held a third week anyhow—possibly a fourth. "The Covered Wagon" in its return popular priced appearance at the Cameo fared only fairly well. The picture had previously played all the suburban runs so its revival appealed to few. Keith's Palace had a good week with Raymond Griffith in "Time to Love" as the featured photoplay attraction. "The Heart of Maryland" was not particularly successful at the Allen where it was well reviewed and recommended and offered with an elaborate stage presentation. Whether competitive programs were more alluring, or whether this particular picture did not appeal to the public, is hard to determine. The results, no matter what the explanation, however, are the same.

"Quicksands," at the State, did well. Entertaining picture with popular cast pulled the business. "What Happened to Father," average entertainment, got by with fair business for the week. "The Little Adventuress" picturization of the popular play "Dover Road," failed to score the success on the local screen that it did on the local stage when produced. Its failure to ring a bull's eye on the screen is attributed to its wide divergence from the original story and miscasting of many major roles. It played all last week with moderate success only at Keith's East 105th St., and somewhat below moderate success the first half of the week at Reade's Hippodrome. "Married Alive," at the Hippodrome the last half of the week, went over much better. "The Naked Truth" played its third and last week at the East Ninth St. theatre, showing to more than 30,000 women during the engagement.

Chicago

THEATRE attendance the past week was like the weather, fluctuating, theatres benefiting by the cool breezes which prevailed the latter part of the week.

The Chicago Theatre offered one of its sure fire drawing cards, the fur fashion show, the sixth annual offering of this feature; Joe Laurie, Jr., Milton Watson and other features, as well as "The Prince Of Head Waiters" on the screen, the combination drawing excellent business. The Oriental, which is little affected by weather or other conditions, enjoyed its usual good business with "Barbed Wire" as its feature picture and Paul Ash's "Spice Box Revue" on the stage. "Metropolis" was held over at the Roosevelt and played to fair business. "The Big Parade" again showed its popularity by bringing splendid records to McVickers Theatre.

The Tivoli on the south side had a good week with "Lost At The Front" on the screen, and Bennie Kreuger's stage show. At the Capitol, attendance was normal with "The Night Of Love" on the screen, Vitaphone and Del and his Capitol Merrymakers in "A Gypsy Caravan," as well as other specialties rounding out the bill.

At the Marbro, "Is Zat So?" Benny Maroff with his stage show, "Fortune Tellers" and Vitaphone had a fairly satisfactory week, despite the hot weather.

The Uptown had a strong drawing card in Ted Lewis and his Musical Clowns and on the screen, "Lost At The Front," resulting business being good. "Dearie" was the feature at the Sheridan, where Verne Buck and his orchestra were the leading stage attractions, business being average. At the Granada, the program included "The Satin Woman," Vitaphone, Charles Kaley and other stage specialties and attendance was up to normal.

Los Angeles

THE warm weather in Los Angeles so far has not resulted in a noticeable slump at the box office, probably due to the cooling and refrigerating systems in the theatres.

The Criterion had a double line one block long each night waiting to see the return run of "The Big Parade." The Metropolitan also enjoyed a good week with Buster Keaton in, "College."

At Loew's State, "Running Wild" was the feature picture and Rube Wolf in his stage diversion played to average business.

At the Uptown, Dave Good and the Revelers in an entertaining series of musical numbers and Dolores Costello in "The Heart of Maryland" united in making an average box office report for the week.

Two West Coast Theatres, Grauman's

Egyptian with "Barbed Wire" and Million Dollar with "Beau Geste," both second run pictures, report satisfactory patronage.

"Seventh Heaven" in its thirteenth week at Carthay Circle and "King of Kings" at Grauman's Chinese are fair competitors in attracting large attendance during these warm days.

Minneapolis

THE weather remained cool and fair during almost the entire week, and the moving picture theatres were rewarded with some good crowds.

The State enjoyed an excellent week with Clara Bow in "Rough House Rosie," supplemented by Whispering Jack Smith and the Flonzaley quartet on the Vitaphone and a rather elaborate song and dance act. "The Whirlwind of Youth," with Lois Moran and Donald Keith proved popular at the Strand, although not enough so to warrant holding it over another week. Eddie Cantor in "Special Delivery" attracted good crowds at the Lyric. Pantages made the most of "Dearie" with Irene Rich and profited by a sturdy showing at the box office. "Too Many Crooks" with Mildred Davis was the Hennepin-Orpheum's choice of picture, and this picture seemed to make a hit with the vaudeville fans. Business at the neighborhood houses was unusually good, with the Loring, Lagoon, Rialto and Lyndale showing such pictures as "The Beloved Rogue," "Wedding Bills," "Knockout Reilly" and "Women Love Diamonds."

Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE sweltered through one of the season's hottest weeks and Milwaukee theatres did correspondingly poor business.

The Wisconsin theatre, which enjoys the reputation of being the coolest theatre in the city, tempted patrons with John Gilbert in "Twelve Miles Out" and the musical program offered by Dave Schooler and his Play Boys. "Painting The Town" was the week's attraction at the Alhambra; it played to slim houses. Even "Dance Magic" at the Merrill failed to bring in good patronage. The Strand showing Milton Sills in "Framed," did fairly well. The Garden found business fair with "Backstage" as the feature.

Neighborhood theatres experienced much the same slack business as the down town theatres. The Milwaukee theatre, showing "Tillie the Toiler," drew very good business considering the unfavorable weather. "Rough House Rosie" was the attraction at the Modjeska and Tower theatres. "Man Power" at the Oriental was successful in attracting good audiences.

Ottawa

EXHIBITORS of Ottawa, Ontario, kept up a valiant fight against the hot weather during the week of July 25 with fair box office results.

The best all-round picture of the week was "Ritzy," Elinor Glyn's story, in which Betty Bronson is starred. This played B. F. Keith's Theatre and was appreciated by patrons. "The Missing Link" at the Ottawa Regent proved a strong attraction, particularly for the children, and Manager Ray Tubman counted considerably with this one, all things considered.

"Captain Salvation" had the biggest opening day at the Imperial Theatre of any picture in months and mid-week patronage also held up nicely. The capable string orchestra, recently installed, also helped to draw.

"Rolled Stockings" proved to be a good box-office title at the Centre Theatre. There was a big crowd for the first day but it faded on the two succeeding days. Some wondered if the censors had been heavy with the scissors on this picture. The feature for the last half of the week at the Centre was "Drums of the Desert" which registered steady business.

Typical summer crowds attended the Francais Theatre for the series of three features there—"Footloose Widows," "Phantom of the Opera" and "Obey the Law." "The Boy Friend" was added for the last two days' programme, making it a double bill, with little patronage effect.

At the Eden Theatre in Hull, Manager Donat Paquin had "Mother" as a feature attraction but only a fair number were interested.

The World's Poultry Congress brought 10,000 delegates to Ottawa from 43 countries but most of the delegates admired the decorations on the outside of the theatres.

Philadelphia

A RATHER humid week hurt business perceptibly in all the down town houses.

The Stanley with Lon Chaney in "The Unknown" played to capacity business practically all week. The bill had an added drawing card in a spectacular offering, "Fiesta Espagnola," by Agnes Boone & Company and David Pesetzki's special solo "Rhapsody in Blue."

"Captain Salvation" opening at the Stanton got only fair patronage. "The Brute," with Monte Blue at the Globe, ran to just fair summer business.

The Fox with Reginald Denny in "Fast and Furious" and as added attractions the comedy team of Brennan & Rogers, creators of "Margie," and the Thirteen Parisienne Redheads featuring Bobby Grice, drew good business all week.

The Capitol offering Billie Dove in "The Tender Hour" did not have a wholly satisfactory week.

The Arcadia, with Jetta Goudal in "White Gold," played to average summer business, while the Karlton with Irene Rich in "Dearie" did a little better.

"Resurrection" at the Palace clicked fairly well while Milton Sills in "Framed" at the Victoria did a little better than most of the downtown Market Street houses.

Baltimore

AIDED by an enormous advertising and publicity campaign in the two Hearst newspapers here, the American and News, "Tillie the Toiler," starring Marion Davies, did a tremendous business at Loew's Century here during the week beginning Monday, July 25.

Sam Robbins and his Baltimorean band had a quartet of singers and dancers in a special act called "Watteau."

The second week of "The Unknown," starring Lon Chaney, at Loew's Valencia, proved one of the best second weeks in the history of that playhouse.

"Paying the Price," is reported to have done a very good summer business at Keith's Hippodrome with five acts of vaudeville on the program but the other three first run playhouses including Warners' Metropolitan with "Simple Sis," the New Theatre with "Painting the Town," and the Rivoli with "Framed," starring Milton Sills, did not do so well.

To a certain extent the hot weather might be blamed for the decrease in business for Baltimore was again struck with a torrid blast during the week.

Albany

THE Dempsey-Sharkey fight pictures proved the best bet in the Albany, Troy and Schenectady district last week, attracting a heavy following wherever shown. There was plenty of competition for all houses, especially those in Albany, with Milk Fund bouts, Lindbergh's reception, hot weather half holidays and daylight saving. But the Dempsey pictures nosed out an easy winner.

"The Poor Nut" was well played at the Mark Strand in Albany and coupled with the usual Vitaphone presentations, cashed in on the money. At the Leland, "The Blonde Saint" led the field from start to finish and appeared to catch the popular fancy. The Mark Ritz in Albany, had its innings with "Man Power" running the week, showing well to the front as the barriers came up on the opening day, demonstrating plenty of speed through the remaining stretch of five days.

In Troy, the "Prince of Headwaiters" was well played by the general public and appeared to give plenty of satisfaction from start to finish. At the Lincoln theatre in Troy, the going was rather rough during the last day or so of "Paris" although the finish got off to a flying start on account of Saturday's rain. During the latter part of the week "The Broncho Twister" ran in the bunch without cashing in at the money end. Incidentally, the racing season starts this week at Saratoga Springs, and the biggest and best pictures shown on Broadway will be featured at the Saratoga houses in the entertainment of those who are horse wise, or who think they are, as they lay their odds.

Boston

BETTER grosses are reported all along the line this week, partly due to the excellence of the films shown and partly due to weather conditions. It has been an unusual season of rain for all New England.

A reshowing of Paramount's "The Covered Wagon" at the Metropolitan grossed fully as well as "Metropolis" the previous week. It will be followed by the farce "Time to Love." Gladys St. John and Caesar Nesi, the former well known as a musical comedy star, were featured in the presentation with Gene Rodemich and his Met Merry Makers. Publix Opportunity Girls provided the stage number assisted by Klein and the Grand Orchestra with Arthur Martell at the organ.

Loew's State featured "Twelve Miles Out," playing to houses well above the average in gross. It was also au revoir week to Phil Spitalny and his jazz boys. Spitalny moves to Loew's Orpheum next week. "Beau Geste" holds over for a third week at the Fenway, thereby equalling the record for the theatre.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle in person was featured at Loew's Orpheum in a vaudeville skit, en route to a come-back in the films. A Lon Chaney film, "The Unknown" was featured. The box office figures were eminently satisfactory.

"Drums of the Desert" and "Horse Shoes" were the double features at the twin houses, Modern and Beacon. Other films showing were "Ladybird" at the Scollay Square Olympia, "Fast and Furious" at the Boston, "Tillie the Toiler" at the Bowdoin Square, "Dance Magic" at the Washington Street Olympia, and "A Million Bid" at the University.

St. Louis

THE presence of the personality of Herbert Rawlinson at the Ambassador Theatre, Seventh and Locust streets, has toned up the business of Skouras Brothers' big down town "picture palace" and they have high hopes that he will eventually prove as big a tonic for box office receipts that Brooke Johns proved at the Missouri Theatre, Grand boulevard at Lucas avenue.

For the week the screen feature at the Ambassador was "Service for Ladies" glorifying Adolphe Menjou as a head waiter.

The Missouri Theatre's screen attraction was "Ten Modern Commandments." With Brooke Johns and his entertainers going great the box office receipts were up to average.

Loew's State offered "Women Love Diamonds," on its screen and got its share of the week's patronage for the movie theatres.

Out at the West End Lyric and Lyric Skydome "Cheaters" was the film bill. Attendance was average.

The St. Louis Theatre offered "His Dog" and the usual number of Orpheum Circuit vaudeville. This house continues to do good business in the hot weather.

Reports from the neighborhood houses were that business was still off. Even double feature programs fail to bring in the number of patrons the houses should have.

Southern Illinois still suffering from the National Coal Strike and no relief can be expected before Thanksgiving Day, if that soon. Elsewhere in the St. Louis territory conditions could be decidedly better.

Des Moines

THE Capitol Theatre playing "Twelve Miles Out" did an exceptionally good week, which was attributed, however, largely to the stage show, one of the highly billed New Idea Stage Shows of the Publix circuit with Jimmy Ellard, as the personality man, most popular. Comment for the picture was favorable. The star highly commended. At the Des Moines "When a Man Loves" proved a little heavy for summer. The Strand Theatre has cut on their newspaper advertising entirely and this had some effect on business there. "Running Wild" and "Lonesome Ladies" were the pictures there.

Salt Lake City

THE Twenty Fourth of July being a holiday in Utah possibly added to the volume of theatre business which has averaged exceptionally big in spite of the warm weather which has somewhat abated during the latter part of the week.

The Paramount Empress Theatre played to capacity houses during the showing of "The Ten Modern Commandments," starring Esther Ralston, and also the presentation of a special stage attraction billed as "The Metropolitan Ensemble."

All house records have been broken at the Pantages Theatre this past week it is announced. The Siamese Twins, being featured on the vaudeville bill are stated to be the cause of this tremendous business rather than the motion picture offered in this connection, which was "Two Black Crows."

Adolphe Menjou in "Service for Ladies" was shown at the Victory Theatre audiences here, where unusually big summer business has been enjoyed throughout the week.

The American Theatre varies from the general run of theatre reports given out here this week, in stating that only fair results have been had during their double feature program consisting of "High Hat," and "The Blonde Saint."

"Tarzan and the Golden Lion" crowded the Gem Theatre, especially with the child populace of the city and fairly good results are reported.

Lon Chaney has been a drawing card in this city during the past week, having been featured in the second showing of "Mr. Wu" at the Rialto where full houses were the outcome. He also drew unusually good business to the Star, a second and third run house, in "Tell It To The Marines."

Detroit

MONEY turned over to the treasurer at nearly all of the houses balanced accounts satisfactorily this week.

The second and third week's run of "Metropolis" and "Three Miles Out" in the Adams and Madison was summed up by a good financial report.

Manager Immerman has reason to smile over the Michigan's business on "The Stolen Bride," with Billie Dove and Lloyd Hughes. The entire showing, billed in connection with a stage presentation, proved a big success.

Dolores Costello in "Old San Francisco" went over well at the Capitol. Good attendance was experienced throughout the week, early evening trade being exceptionally heavy.

The State did more than was expected with "Too Many Crooks" and a band show headed by Fred Stritt. Business here was better than at any other house along movie circle.

"Simple Sis" at the Colonial brought in good crowds at the matinee and evening shows during the greater part of the week.

Central Penn.

RETURN of extremely hot weather, which sent more people away to Summer resorts and made others prefer the baseball parks to other forms of outdoor amusement, had its adverse effect on Harrisburg theatres during the past week.

The photoplay attractions which probably proved the best drawing cards, in spite of the mid-summer handicap, were: "The Better 'Ole," with Syd Chaplin at Loew's Regent, and "Framed," with Milton Sills, at the Colonial.

There were plenty of thrills in "The Last Outlaw" at the Victoria. The management of this theatre also emphasized in its advertisements "Steamed Up," a Charlie Bowers comedy.

The film attraction at the State the first half of the week was the "Secret Studio" with Edgar Moss and Olive Borden, while the last three days "Irish Hearts" was featured, with May McAvoy. This house continues to stress the fact that a new cooling system has been installed.

The Russell Theatre offered "White Mice" the early part of the week and as a change featured "Resurrection." The Strand Theatre put on a "Revival Week," featuring "The Mark of Zorro."

Tampa

TAMPA theatres are enjoying a run of exceptional business for this time of the year, while most of the other cities of this section report their business as being decidedly "off."

The Seminole, a neighborhood house in the north end of Tampa which plays all second run pictures, reported a record business with "Rough House Rosie."

There are three reasons for this unusual hot weather business. The first, of course, are the programs presented. Not only the features, but the short subjects are eating it up. The second reason is "cool and comfortable" houses. The managers are careful to see this promise is kept, and they have sold it to the people. The third reason is the fact that the "rainy season" is with us now in full force. Every day we have heavy tropical rains and this has a great deal to do with keeping people away from the beaches and outdoor resorts.

"Fireman Save My Child" and "Vanity" were the two features used by the Tampa the past week and both pictured pulled very good. The Strand had "Lonesome Ladies," "The Climbers" and "Red Heads Preferred" the report for all three was very good. The Franklin gives the same report with the three features used, "The Frontiersman," "Down the Stretch" and "Cyclone of the Range."

Kansas City

A GOOD lineup of pictures and good weather brought increased attendance to virtually all Kansas City first run theatres this week.

At the Royal "Chang" began its run with large crowds the first week. "Rolled Stockings" at the Newman also drew a good attendance for the week, the business at night being an increase over the previous week, which was unusually hot.

"The Other Woman's Story" at the Liberty attracted a large feminine attendance and business throughout the week was good. "Dance Magic" at the Mainstreet also had its appeal to the younger generation and the weekly attendance was above normal. "Husband Hunters" as the Pantages played to good crowds, as did "Old San Francisco" at the Globe.

Baltimore

(Previous Week)

AS per his usual custom in Baltimore, Lon Chaney took down first honors for big business as the starred player in "The Unknown," at Loew's Valencia for the week beginning Monday, July 18.

This picture started big on Monday, got into the air and remained big throughout the week.

A close runner up for the big business record of the week was "Frisco Sally Levy," shown in conjunction with Joseph Santley and Ivy Sawyer at Loew's Century. It must be remembered, however, that each of these theatres is cooled.

"Birds of Prey," and five acts of family vaudeville, did a good business for hot weather at Keith's Hippodrome. "The Black Diamond Express," with Monte Blue and Edna Murphy, went over good at Warner's Metropolitan, but "Colleen" at the New Theatre and "Three Hours" at the Rivoli, only pulled in fair patronage.

Opinions on Current Productions

"What Women Did For Me"

(Roach-Pathe—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

ALL too rarely in looking over the short product you run across one of the calibre of "What Women Did For Me," which has the clever Charley Chase as the star, supported by Lupe Valez. Charley is always good for a laugh and his vehicles are well above the average. In this one he has a gem after it gets itself set in the first reel.

There are more spontaneous laughs in the second reel than are usually seen in a full five reel comedy. It is largely gag stuff, but one would have to be in a pretty sour mood to fail to appreciate their humor; as for instance, when Charley to overcome his extreme bashfulness with women decides to take the dummy to his domicile with him. He certainly shows himself a true artist in this and following sequences.

It is not hard to realize what women would do for any bashful young man when they are a bevy of beauties such as surround Charley. They are comely, shapely and full of fun and they are given plenty of opportunity to display their wares, etc., which they do to advantage.

While gag stuff predominates, there are situations that make for plenty of humor, and Chase gets the most possible out of all of them. This is a two-reeler that it would be pretty hard to tie.

"Rushing Business"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS comedy of the "Let George Do It" series is typical of the Stern Bros. variety. It is crammed with plenty of action embracing both slapstick and situation humor. Some of it is good and some not so good. There are laughs for the youngsters and some for the grownups over most of the two reels, but they do go to ridiculous lengths for most of their laughs.

George is a department store clerk who is invited by his girl to go to a masked ball. He starts in the guise of a policeman and as a consequence never does arrive at the ball. He is inducted into the service during a traffic jam, he is ordered by a passing sergeant to pursue and trail down a desperate criminal and in various ways he is made to keep the fast action continuous. There is quite a bit of humorous byplay before George unwittingly captures the crook, wins the reward and also the girl. The story offers more possibilities for real humor than are developed, or rather for better humor.

"The River of Suds"—"A Mid-Ocean Sunset"

(Educational—One Reel)

IT is on warm summer days like these, when the high humidity sends thoughts winging to places deliciously cool and fragrant, that such scenes as this Bruce Scenic presents seem particularly appropriate. A bubbling foaming river, winding its way along a rocky bed—a beautiful photographic recording of a sunset on the Pacific. There's pictorial loveliness in abundance here; every foot of the film is interesting. For real, genuine beauty you cannot improve on the sights of nature and when an artist like Robert C. Bruce delves into picture values you can be sure of extra fine results. The camera has caught all the many magic effects of a sunset in mid-ocean. The waters of the Pacific, viewed "a thousand miles from the nearest bit of land," are awe inspiring in their silent grandeur. The lapping waves reflect the radiance of the sun and except for shifting clouds the scene is one of stillness. Fleecy, maiden-white clouds fill up the broad expanse of space above the waters and through them all the sun casts its steady rays, producing a wonderful proportion of lights and shadows, of delicate tints, azure and golden stretches.

We are glad that Educational has a new series of Bruce subjects for the new season; there are many good things coming.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Monty of the Mounted"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

LUPINO LANE himself is the author of this, his latest comedy, which measures up as a fairly entertaining bit of nonsense. As is usually the case this clever Englishman's acrobatics will provoke plenty of laughter. His role of a meek, shy rookie member of a unit of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police enables him to register his clever pantomime very effectively. Except for a lapse in a scene with a trick horse the comedy is fast moving with the true spirit of foolishness. A scene where Lane cannot down a glass of liquor because of his trembling is humorous, as are also his numerous setbacks at the hands of the villians and the sequence where one of the latter gets entangled in his big fur coat.

All of the other men at the R. N. M. P. base had been crippled in their attempts to capture the notorious Black Joe, so they called on the raw rookie to get the man. He does capture the fellow after braving him face to face and losing the good graces of his chief by confusing the latter with the outlaw. Lupino Lane as the central figure in a piece cannot help but make it good. The star's brother, Wallace Lupino, is in the cast along with Estelle Bradley and Glen Cavender. Charles Lamont directed.

"High Spots"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THEY have mixed the laughs with thrills in this one and the result is a comedy with snap and pep. Though it is amusing up to its skyscraper scene, where poor Al St. John has his hands full trying to retain his balance on a lofty ledge, it is really this latter portion of the comedy that elevates the whole considerably. Whether it is because one feels concern for his safety which thus renders Al's "goofy" antics all the more amusing or because high altitude comedy is not seen as frequently as is main floor stuff we do not know, but it can be truthfully said that the piece profits by the injection of the skyscraper incidents. In the earlier part of the comedy St. John is seen as country store clerk. Here he has several opportunities for demonstrating gags with Glen Cavender and Clem Beauchamp. A really good comedy. Jack Lloyd and Estelle Bradley have minor parts. Stephen Roberts was the director.

"Dead Easy"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

ABOUT the average quantity of funny incidents is to be found in this Bobby Vernon comedy. What it shows (with all the usual slapstick drippings) is Bobby trying to sell his play to a French actress and her press representative because his father-in-law-to-be has decided that he cannot win his daughter until he has sold the play. When he tries to press his sale he meets with a forceful "no" from the actress and is forced to compromise. The compromise is simply this: he must publicly commit suicide, proclaiming before he dies that the actress' indifference to his advances was the cause of so fatal a step; then as a result of his act the actress would achieve much publicity and would in gratitude buy his play. After many frantic efforts to die Bobby convinces the gentlemen of the press that he is in earnest and they 'phone their stories to their respective newspapers. With all his notoriety Bobby's girl grows very cold towards him but a few words from the actress clears up everything. Members of the supporting cast are: Jane Manners, a willowy brunette; Billy Engle, Doris Dawson, Tom Dempsey, Bill Blaisdell, Jimmie Harrison. Harold Beaudine directed them.

"Red Hot Sands"

(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

THRILLING experiences and rescues rather than comedy make up this one-reeler in cartoons, which is just another of the Aesop tales. Thomas Cat, Milton Mouse and Al Falfa are off on an exploring tour of Egypt. They visit the Sphinx and discover it is quite animated; they effect a thrilling rescue of Harem Helen from the sheik's castle and they make a bold getaway by scaling the pyramid with the aid of a crane. There is very little attempt at humor in this one, or, if there was it could hardly be recognized as such.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Production of Fox Comedy Schedule Started

The 1927-28 comedy schedule of Fox Films was started this week when George E. Marshall, supervising Fox comedies, selected the directors who will handle the 26 pictures, including ten Imperials, eight Animal comedies and eight of the Van Bibber series.

Marshall chose his men after considering their directorial work in last season's product. The directors and their assignments are: Zion Myers, who made the Animal comedies last year, and who will direct the next eight of that series; Orville Dull, who made several of the "Van Bibbers" and who will this year direct Tyler Brooks, a new Fox acquisition, in this series of Richard Harding Davis stories; Gene Ford, director of the Fox comedy, "Girls," who will direct several more of that type with Sally Phipps and Nick Stuart in the leads, and Robert Ray, a new director, who has been signed to direct the Imperial comedies.

Mr. Marshall's staff now includes Murray Roth, Andrew Bennison, Arthur Greenlaw, Guy Gifford, Max Gold, Al Lowenthal and Lou Breslow. The comedy supervisor intends adding four new men to this group.

F. N. Buys "Valley of Giants" as Sills Vehicle

"The Valley of the Giants," Peter B. Kyne's novel, has been purchased by First National as a vehicle for Milton Sills. The production of the film has been assigned by Al Rockett, production chief at Burbank, to Wid Gunning. Most of the picture will be made in the lumber region of California—in the Big Trees section of Sonoma.

Madame Pompadour

Dorothy Gish Has a Colorful Picture

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT'S become quite the habit for Dorothy Gish to portray historical characters whose amours established them as the foremost representatives of sex appeal during their brief fling. In her newly-made English production, "Madame Pompadour," the comedienne has an enjoyable time, though the picture cannot be called as good entertainment as "Nell Gwyn." Of course much of the Madame's life could not be exposed to the relentless light of the camera. But Dorothy makes her sufficiently glamorous without stepping a great deal out of character.

Naturally the picture is saturated with romance—and to keep thoroughly in line with the best screen traditions the central figure is painted as sympathetic and actuated by the best desires. The Madame during her reign as the favorite at the court of Louis XV was not so awfully scrupulous about her conduct. But movies are movies. And the truth must be colored. Pompadour is presented as a wistful, fragile type of heroine instead of the amorous hussy that wound the giddy king around her fingers.

The picture is mostly a character sketch—and the director has missed many opportunities to color the situations. But it makes good entertainment, as mentioned above—what with its vibrant performances by the star and Antonio Moreno—and its pictorial beauty. It measures out a thrill or two and the plot is consistent.

The Cast: Dorothy Gish, Antonio Moreno, Henry Bosc, Jeff McLaughlin, Nelson Keys, Cyril McLaglen, Marcel Beauplau, Marie Ault. Director, Herbert Wilcox.

THEME: Romantic drama of favorite of court of Louis XV.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Pictorial appeal. Consistent plot. Appeal of star. Costumes. Romance of heroine and artist. Acting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up historical angle of character. Tell something of Pompadour's popularity with Louis XV. Exploit star in costumes.

DRAWING POWER: Star's name and good advertising should put it over. For high class patronage.

Produced by Herbert Wilcox. Distributed by Paramount. Length, seven reels. Released, August, 1927.

On Ze Boulevard

Plenty of Entertainment in French Farce

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

YOUR patrons should display a more than usual amount of interest in this light and entertaining comedy of a French waiter who inherits a million francs—the grand prize of a lottery. There is nothing heavy in it, no food for thought; how Gaston (Lew Cody) developed a swelled head with his sudden inheritance and how his sweetheart, Musette (Renee Adoree), saves him from the snares of two clever society crooks—that is the sum and substance of the story.

It does not present a boulevardier in the manner of Chaplin's "A Woman of Paris" and is undoubtedly as far away from the real Paris as is the studio in which it was made; "On Ze Boulevard" is a burlesque done in the Hollywood manner (that is: it did not require any puckered brows or terrific concentration in thinking up its sparse plot). Lew Cody stands head and shoulders over his players in the matter of acting and his are the talents that keep the piece moving. With his expressions of irritation, of would-be debonair poise, he is quite amusing in his moments where he tries to climb up the ladder of society to the cynical giggles of the bystanders. You'll like his easy manner and realistic performance. Renee Adoree hasn't nothing much to do, and one wonders why so talented an actress should be given such an unappealing role. Dorothy Sebastian does clever work.

The Cast: Lew Cody, Renee Adoree, Anton Vaverka, Dorothy Sebastian, Roy D'Arcy. Directed by Harry Millarde.

THEME: Parisian waiter, winning lottery prize, proceeds to make a fool of himself, the money going to his head like wine. However, his sweetheart is the means of bringing him to his senses and saving his money.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Cody as waiter. Sneezing episode and climax where crooks attempt to rob him.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tie-ups possible with beverage stores. Main street can be utilized for "boulevard" ideas.

DRAWING POWER: Moviegoers who are not exacting in their screen fare should find it pleasing.

Produced and Distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Length, 6 reels. Released, July, 1927.

Lonesome Ladies

Nothing Unusual But Entirely Satisfactory

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE triangle situation bobs up here to confront Lewis Stone once he has married and settled down to a life of domesticity. It is nothing unusual in plot or treatment, but the presence of the star gives it a tone and quality which (if you appreciate his artful style of acting) make it worth seeing. His role is a conventional one—that of a successful architect—who thinks he has checked out his wild oats.

He feels himself snug and secure until a lonesome widow comes out of the past and stalks his footsteps. She has remembered some amorous tidbit which engaged them in their salad days. It is when she sends for him to plan a house that he falls for her charms again. You see, she is attired in one of those diaphanous draperies commonly known as negligee. The gossips get in their deadly work. As the wife's best friends they deem it wise to inform her of her philandering husband. Which starts the kettle-of-fish a-boiling.

It is a more-or-less thankless role which Anna Q. Nilsson carries here. She finds eventual happiness. A worthy contribution is offered by Jane Winton as the other woman. She makes the character really convincing. As for Mr. Stone he is in a class by himself in portraying the man of affairs—domestic or financial—or what you will.

The Cast: Lewis Stone, Anna Q. Nilsson, Jane Winton, Edward Martindel. Director, Joseph Henabery.

THEME: Domestic drama featuring triangle situation with other woman endeavoring to intrigue married man.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Introductory and concluding scenes. Poise and subtle acting by Lewis Stone. Scene when husband meets other woman. Reconciliation. Settings.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Be sure to feature Stone and his talent for playing successful man of affairs. Feature Anna Nilsson and Jane Winton. Play up title for teaser campaign using throwaways, etc., asking—"Who Are the Lonesome Ladies?"

DRAWING POWER: Title has some drawing power. And Stone has following. Suitable for better class houses.

Produced and distributed by First National. Length, six reels. Released, August, 1927.

The Cruel Truth

Bright, Clever and Well Presented

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THERE are some rather dramatic highlights and tense situations in this feature and they are presented plausibly and capably by a well balanced cast with but five principals. The old, old problem is involved of a mother's sacrifice for the love of her daughter, but it is served in a little different shape than usual and it is done so convincingly that it is not nearly so far fetched as a recounting of the tale would make it seem.

It is the story of a very young appearing mother with a daughter of marriageable age. The mother wins the love of a very much sought young heir to a large fortune and she goes through all of the tortures of a beauty parlor to preserve her beauty, at the same time keeping secret from the young man that she has a daughter.

The daughter appears on the scene, is rescued from drowning by the young hero, who does not know her identity, but who promptly falls in love with her—and this time falls for keeps. He reveals the fact to the girl's mother, not knowing their relationship and, despite the many hardships she has been through, she promptly releases him from his promise of marriage to secure her daughter's happiness.

The Cast: Hedda Hopper, Constance Howard, Hugh Allan, Frances Raymond and Ruth Handforth.

THEME: Romantic drama of a young appearing mother who goes through tortures to preserve her beauty that she might win the heir to a large fortune and then yields her claim to him when he falls into love with her daughter.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The beautiful sets and gowns: the splendid acting of the entire cast: the tensely dramatic situation when the young mother sacrifices her love for her daughter.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: An easy tieup with beauty parlors and with modiste shops. The rescue of the girl from the surf. The dramatic revelation to the mother of the hero's love for her daughter's happiness.

DRAWING POWER: Should go well in any house.

Produced and distributed by Sterling Pictures Corp. Length 5,700 feet. Release date, July 15, 1927.

Death Valley

Wealth of Realistic Touches in This Desert Story

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

TELLING its story with simplicity and directness this tale of the famous hell hole is a truly "photographic" bit of work. It is photographic in that its aspect of life in the raw can be compared to the undeviating neutral outlook, the unerring accuracy of the camera. This quality of realism predominates; it subjugates the noticeably familiar story and is so boldly presented that it recalls to mind the work of those other realists, von Sternberg and von Stroheim.

A primitive drama of the hard, unresponsive desert where the terrific heat and the bitterness of lonely thoughts leave men prey to the consuming passions of envy and greed. On one side you have the innocence of youth and on the other the evil craftiness of more mature minds. The boy and girl are the diametrical opposite of the sordid prospector and the feminine wreck that must acknowledge him as a master. The struggle of the two opposing forces avoids the sordid and yet remains brutal.

The story was conceived and adapted by Raymond Wells, who plays no small part in putting it over. He is really excellent in his sinister role, doing the best work of the entire cast. Carroll Nye and Rada Rae are competent as the young people while Sam Allen handles a comedy role very well.

The Cast: Carroll Nye, Rada Rae, Sam Allen, Raymond Wells, Grace Lord, Rex (Dog). Directed by Paul Powell.

THEME: Drama of lone youth who, striking gold in desert, is robbed by neighboring prospector. Latter kills his partner that he may have gold for himself but he dies of snake bite while running away. Youth recovers gold.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Picture's economy of outline. Acting by Wells and Miss Lord. Theft of nuggets and murder. Man's death on hot sands. Authentic locale of story.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Bill has something different. Play up reputation of Death Valley. Tell them acting is very good, that it's a true-to-life story.

DRAWING POWER: Picture should do very well.

Produced and distributed by First Division Distributors, Inc. Released, July, 1927. Footage, 5,700 feet.

Skedaddle Gold

No Different from the General Run of Westerns

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE wide awake wits and ready fists of Wally Wales continue to nonplus the villains. This Western shows the Pathe cowboy star playing the role of a youthful deputy, who loses his job and some of his reputation when conspirators outwit him. In the grand finale, however, all things strike their proper balance and Wally more than gets even with his tormentors. The usual march of highlights that decorate the everyday Western are played up in this one; the fist fights, hard riding and the love making should send them out satisfied. Minor twists enter the story here and there. After losing his job the former deputy tries his hand at working a mine and, after devoting much time at his claim, receives an invitation from the sheriff to renew his old association but he refuses, prefering to stick to mining, it being a more profitable one. Again Wally ventures to the city to find his girl, who is in the toils of the villain; the big slugging contest which ensues when these two meet takes place in a boarding house and not on the open range where these encounters are generally staged. Although there are a few changes of atmosphere like the two mentioned incidents, this Western is in line with the construction of its kind. It follows the familiar formula of the hero and heroine drifting apart because of the plottings of the villain, and coming togther again at the end after the hero has given the mustached one a pasting.

The Cast: Wally Wales, Betty Baker, Robert Burns and Harry Todd. Directed by Richard Thorpe.

THEME: Young Sheriff deputy loses his job when his prisoners outwit him by running off with the evidence. But he subdues them in the later reels, saving his girl from the clutches of one of them. Western drama.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The fist fights, riding, rescuing of the girl, etc.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: The usual Western ballyhoo.

DRAWING POWER: Fair.

Produced by Action Pictures, Inc. Distributed by Pathe. Length, 4,562 feet. Released, July, 1927.

Man Power

Not a Bit Novel, But Packs a Wallop

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

YOU'VE seen this type of picture time and again, but that is no reason why it can't continue to interest you providing it's as well done as it is here. The theme, naturally, is its handicap, but it gets away from the beaten track through its treatment. Richard Dix knows a situation when he sees it—and he's also at home in comedy characterization. He bobs up in Peaceful Valley as a box-car passenger—with nothing to recommend him except an excellent war record. When the girl dashes by in a smart roadster the plot gets under way and leads both hero and heroine on an adventurous and romantic journey.

To get down to brass tacks Byron Morgan—who wrote the story—sees to it that much villainous plotting must be aired before the girl's father saves his tractor plant. Which is where Dix comes to the rescue. Having managed a tractor during the war his new work is easy for him. As in the stories he wrote for Wally Reid the author gives the villain just enough rope with which to hang himself. The hero, meanwhile, hits it off like a regular fellow, and since he has an incentive to perk up through the response of the girl he emerges looking like Richard Dix always looks off screen.

The film is crammed with snappy action—which reveals some thrilling water scenes in the bursting dam. Put it down as a convincing shot. There is a wealth of humor, too—to say nothing of picturesque exteriors.

The Cast: Richard Dix, Mary Brian, Philip Strange, Charles Hill Mailes, Oscar Smith, George Irving, Charles Clary. Director, Clarence Badger.

THEME: Comedy-drama of luckless youth who demonstrates he has good stuff in him when the opportunity arrives to prove himself a hero.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Dam scene. Thrills. Exteriors. Treatment of plot. Characterization by Dix. Subtitles.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up Dix as ideal actor for this type of story. Plug title and emphasize how man can be made over when right girl becomes interested in him.

DRAWING POWER: Star's following and title will attract them here. Good for any type of house.

Produced and Distributed by Paramount.
Length, six reels. Released, July, 1927.

The Mojave Kid

Brimful of Thrilling Action

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THEY have certainly crowded a lot of thrilling action into this Western, which is Bob Steele's first starring vehicle for F B O. One dramatic climax follows another so closely that it leaves one sort of bewildered. There is a lot of old stuff in it, but it is a picture that is bound to hold the interest throughout. The story is well above the average of this type picture, and its speed is bound to make it popular with audiences.

Bob Steele appears to be the youngest looking Western star we have seen, and he is going to be well liked, particularly when he gets over the idea of trying so hard to act. He has a wonderfully athletic build, is the ideal type for a Western hero, and has a very pleasing personality. He can ride and he can fight, which are the main requisites for these Westerns. No young actor has had a better opportunity to show his complete line of wares than has Steele in this one, and he is just about up to all requirements.

The Cast: Bob Steele, Lillian Gilmore, Buck Connors, Bob Fleming, Jay Morley, Theodore Henderson and Nat Mills. Director, Robert North Bradbury.

THEME: Western melodrama in which the hero rescues father, who has been missing for twelve years, and the girl from band of outlaws. The father has the secret of the hiding place of a great fortune in buried treasure, and has been held because of his refusal to reveal it.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The battle for his father and girl between the hero and the villain; the meeting after twelve years between the hero's father and mother; the splendid settings and the great climax in the fight on the cliff.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: The succession of thrilling climaxes; the new Western star, whose success seems assured. The fight for the release of the father and the girl. The wild escape and chase from the bandit retreat.

DRAWING POWER: Should draw unusually well in any house where they like their Westerns.

Produced and Distributed by F B O.
Length, 4,912 feet. Released, September 26, 1927.

Stereoscopic Pictures

LIKE every other field, the motion picture industry has its own pet bugaboos which are carefully fostered and periodically "solved" only to find, in the end, that the elaborate theories so carefully constructed to support the so-called solutions vanish into thin air when put to a practical test.

The idea of stereoscopic motion pictures seems to be of this order. Now it is quite true that stereoscopic movies have been successfully shown by several different methods but in each case binocular vision, or, to put it rather crudely, "two-eyed vision, wherein each eye constructs a slightly different image, has formed the basis of the method.

This is quite as it should be, for stereoscopic pictures without such binocular vision are nothing more than a myth, or, perhaps it would be better to say, an illusion.

Seldom a year goes by, however, without some device appearing on the market (or talk of its appearing on the market), which purports to produce perfect stereoscopic pictures with the assistance of nothing else but the particular device in question.

It may be a special form of motion picture projector, or it may be a screen, or perhaps, even a combination of the two. In each case, however, standard, single image film is used, since the advantage of being able to use the film as universally distributed is obvious.

A Special Projector

Within the past twelve months, a special form of projector, which was supposed to project "perfect stereoscopic" pictures was widely advertised (by word of mouth), and at least one large theatre in New York, which threw open its doors last spring, made provision in the projection room for two of these machines, in addition to three of the standard type for the projection of pictures as ordinarily found in theatres.

No small amount of verbal advertising was given to this proposed feature of the theatre's program, so that everyone was expectantly looking forward to the debut of the much heralded projectors. As time passed and the date of the theatre's opening drew near, however, no projectors were in sight and the house eventually opened without them—the standard machines being used instead.

In an effort to counteract this setback, a so-called "stereoscopic" screen was installed so that everything again appeared to be satisfactory. But this screen, when put to the test, was found to have considerable flare—so much so that bright streamers of light appeared to radiate from certain areas when the observer viewed the screen from any one of a number of angles. In addition to this, the surface appeared to be smudged and these dark patches showed through even when the picture was being projected.

As for the stereoscopic value of the screen, it had none whatever and, indeed, the picture looked considerably worse than what would have been provided by a quite ordinary screen.

The Stereoscopic Screen

Claims have been repeatedly made for stereoscopic screens, none of which, however, have been substantiated. In this respect, it is difficult to see just how the illusion of the third dimension can be imparted to a flat picture by simply changing the surface of the screen on which the picture is to be projected.

Any motion picture screen has two principal requirements which must be met to insure satisfactory projection—at least, as far as the screen itself is concerned. First is that of registration and the second item is efficiency in the matter of light reflection. A third item, control over the reflected light, might also logically be added to these two and it is probably true that in practice, this third item is first taken and the matter of registration is left to take care of itself, being accepted as it comes with but little effort being made to obtain the utmost in this respect.

High Reflection Factor

In the matter of efficient light reflection, the material from which the screen is made should be a good reflector of light and should absorb as little of the light falling upon it as possible. This is necessary in order to obtain the greatest utilization of the volume of light contained within the projected beam.

Control over the reflected beam (whether over a wide angle or narrow angle) is obtained by a choice of material (such as silk for wide angles and metal for narrow angles) or by changing the texture of the screen surface such as is commonly done in the case of metallic screens. Thus a rough texture is used for narrow angles and a fine texture for the wide angle type.

Where this is done, however, the registration of the screen, or its ability to faithfully reproduce the details of the projected picture, is also affected because the registration is controlled by the surface texture of the screen.

Perfect Registration

For so-called "perfect" registration, to use a badly abused word, it is necessary for each pin-point of screen area to reflect light equally (as far as concerns brightness) to every point located within the viewing area of the picture. This requirement in itself calls for a perfect diffusing surface which, in turn, necessitates an extremely fine-textured surface.

Changing the surface of the screen in order to obtain control over the reflected light (such as confining it within a narrow beam) immediately affects the registrations, making it worse, since certain minute screen areas will no longer reflect light over the entire viewing area.

As far as stereoscopic pictures are concerned, however, no screen, no matter how fancifully it may be constructed, can possibly turn the trick. Usually, the principal result of such screens is to seriously affect the registrations, thus making the picture wore than would otherwise be the case.

A screen which registers perfectly will, it is quite true, give some apparent depth to the picture but this is only due to the fact that all areas of the screen are functioning perfectly and are faithfully reproducing what the camera saw when the picture was being taken. That, in the final analysis, is the most that can be expected of any screen and any illusion of picture depth beyond this must come from the skill of the cameraman when the picture is being taken.

In the same way that two still photographs may differ considerably in the matter of apparent depth so also will the various film differ and on single device, such as a projector or screen can possibly add something to the picture which, in the first place, was never there.

The illusion of a certain amount of picture depth may be present under certain conditions, but even at best it is never very pronounced and among a group of observers there is usually much argument before it is generally admitted that real depth is present.

With true stereoscopic pictures the effect is so marked and outstanding that but a glance is sufficient to assure one of its presence. There used to be no argument over it.

This much can be said: that stereoscopic motion pictures without some form of binocular vision are entirely out of the question.

S. M. P. E. Fall Meeting at Lake Placid

L. C. PORTER, Edison Lamp Works, Harrison, N. J., Secretary of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, announces that the Fall meeting will be held at Whiteface Inn, Lake Placid, N. Y., September 26th to 29th. Announcement will be made at a later date of the Committee of Arrangements to be appointed by Mr. Willard Cook, President of the Society. The Spring Meeting held in Norfolk in April was a very satisfactory one and every effort will be made to have the coming meeting even more successful.

Over eighty firms engaged in the manufacture of technical equipment for the making and showing of motion pictures are represented at these meetings of the S. M. P. E. and all branches of the motion picture industry are beginning to take a greater interest in these conventions.

International Employees Hold Their Outing

The Second Annual Outing of the Employees of the International Projector Corporation was held at Narragansett Inn, Lindenhurst, Long Island, Saturday, July 30th, 1927.

Over 250 of the officers and employees made the thirty-five mile trip to Lindenhurst in five large busses and private automobiles accompanied by the International Projector Corporation Band which supplied the music for the outing. After the customary photographing all adjourned to the Narragansett Inn for an excellent dinner free from all formalities except a few remarks by Mr. W. C. Michel, Vice-President and Treasurer of the company. A telegram was also read sent from Chicago by Mr. Harley L. Clarke, President of the International Projector Corporation, who expressed his regrets that he was unable to be present but sent a very liberal contribution which was divided into fifty-five cash prizes drawn by the number on the tickets for the outing. Other prizes were contributed by friends, which were drawn in a similar manner or given to the winners of the various contests during the day.

The five-inning baseball game was won by the shop but the office says that the next year the fourth to ninth innings will be played instead and they have every confidence that they will win next time. Farrell won the hundred-yard dash; Froelich the standing broad-jump; Florentine the running broad-jump and McAloon won the pie-eating contest. The Committee on Games consisted of Messrs. G. A. Erickson, Charles Lutz, and A. E. Meyer as Chairman. After the close of the games supper was served.

Among those present were: W. E. Green, Vice-President of National Theatre Supply Company, an old friend of all the company; Jacob Lurie, George Edwards, Laurence Jones, S. R. Burns, Vice-President of International Projector Corporation; Messrs. Frappier, Healey, Griffin; Mr. P. A. McGuire and Charles Lutz were on the Committee of Arrangements with Mr. Rudolph Kneuer as Chairman, and all agreed that they deserve much credit for the success of the outing which, of course, is to be repeated next year.

Benjamin Goetz, of Consolidated Film Laboratories

Cleveland Theatre To Live Up to Its Name

The Oriental theatre, Cleveland, is about to be listed in the local theatre directory. It's the house formerly known as the East Ninth St. theatre at East Ninth St. and Walnut Ave. It was built early this year by the Universal-Brody interests, but was recently taken over by the Manheim Amusement Company. Milton Hexter, house manager, announces that the house is being entirely redecorated to fit its name. Oriental wall decorations and furnishings will be carried out throughout. Even the ushers and attendants will wear oriental costumes.

Consolidated Film's Lab. Highly Efficient

A group of laboratories in the East and West with production facilities comparable to the country's most successful industries is the reason why Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., has been able to increasingly give better service and lower prices. To achieve this objective, they have perfected scientific and technical branches of the laboratory business to a point of the highest efficiency.

All this is said to have been accomplished without a sacrifice of quality. Every reel of Consolidated prints carries a guarantee for the reason that they are developed under carefully standardized conditions maintained by the use of the latest scientific methods and automatic equipment as well as the highest quality materials and every process is under the personal supervision of expert craftsmen gathered from all over the world.

New House at La Grange, Ga., Recently Opened

Monday, August first, saw the opening of a new and modern theatre at LaGrange, Ga., erected and owned by Charlie Jabaley, of that city, and under the management of R. Sansone. The house has been temporarily named Lincoln Street and is located at the corner of Lincoln and Garfield Streets.

The theatre is an attractive red brick building with a marquee extending over the front and a seating capacity of 450. It was equipped by the National Theatre Supply Company with the most modern equipment.

You can't blame the weather

You know it will be hot in July and August. It always is.

You know people like to be comfortable—and won't sit and perspire in a hot theatre.

So you can't blame the weather—nor the public. It's up to yourself if you want good, profitable business this summer.

"The Poor Nut"—First National, Mark Strand Theatre, New York City

Evening World: "Very funny picture, with plenty of good comedy, no little pathos and some excellent acting. Mr. Mulhall, always good comedian, played with such success that he had audience pausing between laughs for little sniffle. Screen version can be counted success. Nothing overdone and much subtlety in direction. Charlie Murray responsible for many of laughs. Jean Arthur very satisfactory."

Mirror: "Mr. Mulhall be praised, piece is just one big laugh without cessation. His characterization excellent. Performance can be compared to best one of Chaplin and Langdon and it will be difficult matter rightly to apportion honors. Honors, with minor exceptions, belonged to Mulhall alone. His appeared to be knowledge of art of pathos as related to humor."

Telegram: "One of most worthy comedies to reach screen for several months. All comedy seems to have been retained, with few dashes of slapstick by Charles Murray for good measure. Broad eye of camera proves once again superior potentialities of screen in representing action. Jack Mulhall succeeds in being funny."

Telegraph: "Has gained in entertainment value in its transition from stage to cinema. Humor and pathos remain intact and athletic incidents are much more realistic then on stage. Jack Mulhall puts over wonderful piece of business as poor nut. Character he portrays rich in possibilities, and Jack makes most of them. Charlie Murray gets more than his share of laughs. And there's Jane Winton to vamp you and Jean Arthur for you to love. To Jack go first honors."

World: "Jack Mulhall played part earnestly . . . ludicrously. Charlie Murray added plenty of broad comedy."

Journal: "Bright comedy, amusing situations. Jack Mulhall does well with role and Jean Arthur charming."

Times: "Comedy of college life and love. Laughter in it, gags, Charley Murray's unfailing comicalities and appeal of Jean Arthur."

"Naughty But Nice"—First National, Mark Strand Theatre, New York City

Post: "Colleen's pantomime so perfectly attuned to situations that you find every minute of film entertaining. Her pictures can always be depended upon to be amusing and interesting."

American: For those who enjoy love and romance, adventure and bright, sparkling comedy, it might be well to check up 'Naughty But Nice' as safe project in week's theatre going. Smooth, snappy and altogether enjoyable love comedy. Among best things Miss Moore has given to screen."

Globe: "Comical story . . . tinged with romance, adventure and humorous incidents."

"Man Power"—Paramount Paramount, N. Y.

World: "The latest Dix photoplay . . . is, as usual, a pictorial treatise for he-men on wooing and winning by pluck and luck the girl of their heart's desire . . . the film looks to us like good box-office value."

The Sun: "Paramount now has a valuable addition to its list of ingenues (Mary Brian) . . . she is pretty, animated and interesting . . . we thought that Richard Dix was unusually good . . . ."

Wall Street Journal: "—so directly told that it held the interest."

Telegram: "The immensely popular Richard Dix is at the Paramount this week in one of our favorite moving pictures. . . . Mary Brian plays the leading feminine role, and is very pretty at it."

AUGUST—

the month of opportunities

The warm days of August invariably cause a big dropping off in motion picture theatre patronage. But they afford the theatre owner an opportune time to make provisions for a more profitable business the coming year.

Now is the time to give special attention to projection equipment. Your projectors may need to be overhauled and worn parts replaced. Or you may need to install a new projector. Whatever alterations or improvments are necessary in any part of your theatre should be made now, so that the beginning of the fall season will find your theatre adequately equipped to meet competition and to hold new patronage.

But be sure that your improvements are lasting ones. In selecting replacement parts be guided by the experience of others, and buy only parts made by the company that built your projector. In buying a projector choose one that has proven its merits to the satisfaction of thousands of owners.

The Simplex Projector has always represented the highest standards of quality from the standpoint of design, detail of construction, efficiency and economy of operation.

Let us send you descriptive catalogue and details of the easy payment plan on which a Simplex may be bought.

Service Selling

Why Not Adopt It and Cut Out the Tricks and the Bunk?

By William A. Johnston

WE have been talking a good deal, lately, about E. V. Richards and his idea of Service Selling.

One of the large national distributors thinks well enough of the idea to send on to New Orleans, last week, an executive who will watch the plan in operation.

In this connection I would like to made a prediction: the first national distributor to adopt this selling policy will "clean up." It won't be easy. It may take a new lot of salesmen or a lot of reformed salesmen and some hard headed exhibitors may considerably impede progress. But the scheme will win out; and if adopted generally it will prove to be a turning point in this trade's history.

* * * *

PERHAPS there are some who don't quite understand the term "Service Selling."

Let me begin an explanation with a personal experience.

Some time ago I worked for a man who was rated one of the business leaders of the country.

He was a heavy buyer of materials and, like all buyers, he always had his guard up. I saw a good many salesmen leave his office thoroughly rebuffed and beaten, especially those who tried to bluff him.

There were two doors to this man's office, one directly from the street, and the other from his factory. Most every salesman came in—if he got in—from the street door: but occasionally a clever one would come in from the factory door.

The men who came in the street entrance always began by talking their own business. But the salesmen who came in after seeing and knowing the factory began talking about the factory, about the man's own business. And naturally and invariably they got either a cordial reception or an order or both.

Now this man's factory happened to be his especial pride and joy. But so is most every man's enterprise, whether it's a theatre or a factory. And the way to see him is the way his own interest lies.

One kind of salesman says: I want to sell you my goods; the other says you need my goods in your business—and I know something of your business needs.

* * * *

SERVICE selling simply means selling pictures to a theatre for the theatre's sake,—which means for the public's sake, which means for the producer's sake.

The service salesman goes to the exhibitor with the exhibitor's interests uppermost in his mind. Why not? The producer wants to get his wares successfully to the public, doesn't he? Very well, the salesman's true effort then is a carry-on through the exhibitor to the public.

The service salesman lays his pictures before the exhibitor, describes them in detail and applies their points of interest to the exhibitor's particular community.

Describing pictures in detail means giving the details of why the picture was made. This is valuable information even if the picture hasn't been produced as yet. There was some mighty good reason why a theme was selected and story material purchased; why the picture is allotted certain supervision, direction, cast, etc.; what its publicity points are, etc. Many an exhibitor will be tickled sick even to get from a salesman the theme of a picture.

Service Selling: By William A. Johnston

The salesman who comes fresh from many other communities can help the exhibitor analyze his own town. He can give valued comparisons. He can suggest ways of contacting the public. He can discuss the possible sales resistance to the titles of the pictures, to the exhibitor's own theatre, etc.

Then comes the important matter of local advertising—the newspapers, their rates and coverage; their effectiveness; the simpler rules of newspaper display; ideas on animated advertising—as done by other exhibitors; economies; lighting; cleaning, etc.; all the successful things other exhibitors are doing.

In other words—service, theatre service; just an ordinarily intelligent and sincere effort to put pictures in an exhibitor's hands, with information and help.

* * * *

I CAN hear a good many howls of derision over this plan. Naturally. We are used to selling pictures by tricks.

The favorite one is the forced run on Broadway, an effort to delude the exhibitor in the outlying districts—and to what avail?

This is such arrant bunk. Putting up a false front and yelling about it is an Indian medicine show trick. The sales tricks in this business are no more intelligent, or ethical, or dignified.

We are not running a carnival business. We have an industry on our hands. It makes no difference whether it is fourth in size or forty-fifth. It is large enough. We have fifteen thousand retail outlets selling pictures daily to several millions of people. We have some two thousand salesmen serving these theatres and it's about time they started to serve—not their bosses but the public, not with tricks, but with service.

If there are any doubts in any minds that this is a large and consequential retailing business let me give this fact: the retail advertising (theatre advertising, of course) done by this business is the largest, for its gross, in the business world.

The public wants to know about the pictures—before they buy. They want to know all about them. They want to know more than the title and the star's name. They shop wittingly not gullibly. We all know that. We admit it. We know the public cannot be bunked. We don't use our medicine show tricks on the public—not for a minute.

Then why continue to use them on the retailer—the exhibitor?

Why continue the bull?

* * * *

OUR retail advertising, per gross of business, is the largest in the country.

And our trade advertising is the least, by far. Why?

Because we strive to sell by tricks rather than by straight merchandising, which means straight information, which means service to the exhibitor who has to buy goods which he has to sell to the public.

That is all Richards is trying to do. He is insisting that the salesman put the pictures intelligently and honestly into the exhibitor's hands so the exhibitor in turn can deal honestly and intelligently with the public.

* * * *

I REPEAT that service selling, when it comes, will prove to be a turning point in motion picture history.

We can go on talking and working for better public relations—in other words, better service from the industry to the public.

But we won't accomplish anything until we put the exhibitor—the firing line man—in a position to give better service.

And the one way to do that is to give the exhibitor service.

If it is to be our policy to trick the public let's continue to trick the exhibitor.

If not, let's quit.

Inside Slants on the Industry

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

HOW did picture quality stack up in the 1926-27 season? There is much comment to the effect that product, on the whole, has not been as good as it should be—or as it must be if the box-office is to be satisfied.

A study of "The Check-Up" in Motion Picture News brings out some interesting facts. This is a box-office barometer, depended upon by exhibitors everywhere, and it shows, with accuracy, what happens when the public sees the pictures.

Taking the 1926-27 season, beginning with last September and running to August 1 this year, the average percentage rating of the product of all companies is about 65 per cent.

In "The Check-Up" a picture is not rated "good" unless it reaches 70 per cent. So the average percentage figure for all the product upon which exhibitors sent reports falls in the classification "fair."

In other words, mediocre.

WITH the exception of a few outstanding pictures, the record of 1926-27 at the box office is not inspiring.

There is plenty of room for improvement all along the line, particularly in the week-in-and-week-out features that are the lifeblood of the theatres and the industry.

THE exhibitor, out on the firing-line where the battle to win the public and keep it won actually goes on, writes us nowadays in drastic language on the subject of pictures.

For example, E. E. Sprague, of the Sherman Theatre, Goodland, Kansas, says: "Small exhibitors have known for the past three years that the picture business was skidding because the public has been driven away from the theatres by the unending stream of over-rated, bunk pictures which we have been forced to show.

"When it is necessary to resort to the oxygen tank and artificial respiration at the 'temple of the motion picture' by hiring $15,000-a-week bands, it means that the death-rattle can be plainly heard.

"The producers are starting to stir uneasily in their sleep and I hope they will wake up before the business is a total loss with no insurance."

THE economy movement in Hollywood, which was duly publicized after several weeks of conferences may or may not amount to something. That remains to be seen; and, in the interim, it should have every chance to succeed, before judgment is passed upon it.

The remaking of expensive pictures, however, goes right along. One of the biggest companies is now engaged in revamping a special which is said to have cost half a million dollars. It was made originally by a director with a big name, but something went wrong.

In the second edition a change has been made in the cast, involving the substitution of a featured player for another; and Director No. 1 is now with another company.

SECRET retakes seem to be in vogue in Hollywood just as much as ever. On another lot, a director, who had been a star previously, worked for some time on a picture. His film has been thrown in the ash can and the picture is being secretly remade by another director.

ARE some people in this industry who ought to know better getting high-hat on the subject of public good-will?

It would seem so, from this incident: a certain well-known exhibitor, universally recognized as an expert in public relations, was sent for by one of the big distributing companies which also operates theatres. He was offered the job—at practically any figure he wanted to name—of going around the country picking out sites for theatres.

He declined the job on the ground that he was not a real estate expert and would not be able to deliver the goods.

One of the film bosses, sitting in the conference, said to the exhibitor: "We're surprised that you would refuse this. But we still want you with us. Can you suggest any job you will accept?"

"Yes," the exhibitor answered. "I can. There is an important work to be done in connection with your theatres. You need a practical director of public relations. I believe I am that man. My plan would include visiting your theatres—particularly the ones that are losing money—studying the situation and finding out whether your manager in that town is established as a citizen of the community or is just a doortender.

"You gentlemen may not realize it, but the big chain hasn't got a Chinaman's chance at big profits unless you give your theatres individuality—the local touch. That means your managers have got to get into the organizations and life of their towns and not be just collection agents for New York.

"If I found that a manager was not in the civic organizations of his town, I'd make it my business to see that he joined; and I'd pave the way for it through connections I could easily set up, because of my own membership in these organizations. They are national in scope; some international. You may not think this is important. I know it is. You are making a great mistake if you don't do everything to cultivate public good-will, locally, in the towns where your theatres are located."

The big executive of the big chain turned to the exhibitor and said: "Let's get this over quick. We don't intend to spend another nickel on public good-will. We are already paying for that through the Hays organization, and it's plenty. We're not going into any of this good-will stuff ourselves."

NOW turn to the other side of the picture. The Saenger theatre interests were heavy sufferers in the recent Mississippi flood. But, as always, the Saenger company had public good-will and definite public service uppermost in its mind, even under very trying conditions.

And in so doing E. V. Richards and his associates are working constructively for the whole industry.

THE following leading editorial in The New Orleans Item shows how and why:

"Greenville (Miss.) slowly gets back to normal. The excitement of the flood passes. The long waiting while the waters receded is done. The work of rehabilitation is under way. Greenville, like other flooded towns, gets to work.

"We note two interesting editorials in the Greenville Daily Democrat-Times. One, printed during the long wait while the water receded, is a tribute to the value of moving pictures. Dozens of Greenville citizens had asked the Democrat-Times every day when the picture show would open again. The editorial told of how moving pictures, taken as a matter of course for years, were missed so much during the long wait, when they were unobtainable, of how the people didn't miss the pictures so much during the first days of flood excitement but how they wanted and needed the entertainment pictures provide during the days of waiting.

"The second editorial is a fine tribute to the Saenger organization, which owns the Greenville theatre. It recounts how the Saenger people, realizing the people's need of entertainment, got films in and opened the theatre at the earliest possible time. They not

John McDermott evidently thinks that the script of "Tillie's Punctured Romance," which Al Chrsitie is reading, is very, very funny. It will be released by Paramount-Famous-Lasky.

There's nothing like whiskers to give a man a lot of "it." Here are Al Cooke and Kit Guard, comedians in F B O's "The Beauty Parlor" series, impersonating the "not a cough in a carton" duo.

Charlie Chase, comedian in Hal Roach Pathe comedies, is musically inclined and spends much of his time thus when off the set.

When Dr. Matthew B. Stirling, anthropologist of the University of California, led the American-Dutch expedition to New Guinea, he obtained a quantity of film posters from the Universal exchanges at Bandoeng, Dutch East Indies, with which to entertain the Papuan head hunters.

No part of picture making is more hazardous than posing for stills. Here are Amma Styers and "Poodles" Hanneford, Educational comedy players, impersonating a scene from Pocahontas, at great risk of life and limb.

Rin-Tin-Tin, the Warner Bros. star, is also a musician by avocation. The lady he is serenading here is no lady; she's his wife, and her screen name is Nanette.

only made special efforts to get the theatre open, while the waters were still about town, but they donated the entire proceeds for the first four nights to local charity work, the money to be allocated by a committee appointed by the mayor.

"THIS is a most valuable donation to the people of the community,' the editorial continues. 'The Saenger organization is probably losers to as great an extent as any business concern in the city. With a heavy expense they haven't received a dollar revenue in nearly 10 weeks, while their two buildings have been used to house refugees, have served as Red Cross headquarters and in fact were turned over entirely to relief work. They have done a lion's share in the relief work here. And on top of this they give the entire proceeds of the first four days to the relief of the people of this community.

"Again, we ask—has a corporation a heart? This one has, at any rate."

"Neither the tribute to the Saenger organizations or the recital of its activities in Greenville will surprise many Orleanians. Orleanians know how quick this organization is to render public service, to help a good cause, in the cities in which it has theatres. The Saengers have been doing this sort of work here for years. It may be simply 'good business' for the theatre company but these services have been of real value to the city."

JUST before Robert J. Flaherty left for the Coast we had the interesting experience of seeing his picture of New York, uncut, on which some six months were spent. Pictorially, we cannot recall anything more impressive. He has used a novel method throughout, filming most of his scenes from a considerable elevation and using a long focus lens, which results in a peculiarly detached and impersonal quality. We are not conscious that the camera is anywhere.

There is no story, and few human beings. He shows New York a tiny bit at a time—a machine, a building, a construction job, a tugboat—and at the end fuses it all into a lovely mosaic. The plan on which he has built it is daring and original. It will be cut to two reels for release by Pathe.

Flaherty told us that he would have liked to take three years instead of six months for the work. Many fine things, he believes, will come from the amateurs who can afford to take months and years, waiting for exactly what they want and experimenting until they have it.

FOX is saying little about Movietone, but doing a great deal. October has been set as the date for the completion in the laboratory of the low-priced theatre installation which is being developed. It would not be fair to reveal figures, but we may say that the cost of Movietone installation is going to surprise a great many people, and will be materially below that of other companies.

FIGURES just made public here by the motion picture branch of the Department of Commerce shows that 78 per cent of the pictures released in France last year were American. We imagine that figure will be revised downward somewhat for 1928. The great production activity in France at the present time will be reflected in the totals for the year, probably in no uncertain manner.

ANOTHER development going quietly ahead is the application of Movietone to the educational and instructional field. Test films of thtis sort are being made up at the Fox-Case studios, with an eye to developing a technique and a method for this application of the apparatus —and it would not surprise us if this field proved larger than the theatrical.

ACCORDING to a cable from the London correspondent of Motion Picture News, Reginald Denny, Universal star, expressed—at a trade luncheon the desire to make pictures in England, and later stated that plans were under way for British production by Universal.

No confirmation of this was obtainable in New York at the Universal home office.

THE initial subjects in M-G-M's program of shorts were shown to the press at the Embassy Theatre on August 4. They included three two-reel comedies from the Hal Roach lot, "Sugar Daddies," "The Sting of Stings," and "Yale vs. Harvard (Our Gang); two Ufa nature pictures, "An African Adventure" and "Soaring Wings," and a two-reel Technicolor subject, "The Flag."

The comedies were in line with the usual Roach product, with the "Our Gang" offering standing out clearly as the best of those shown. The Ufa animal pictures were interesting nature subjects, which deserve wide showing because of their novelty.

"The Flag" tells the famous story of Betsy Ross, with a love theme introduced. Altogether, fine dramatic short subjects.

"THE Bull in the Picture Shop" still brings comments from many quarters. Here is a typical exhibitor comment from Jack Van Epps, of the Fort Lee Theatre, Fort Lee, N. J.: "You are quite right in your original article, 'The Bull in the Picture Shop' and also in your reply to Grainger. Mr. Shugert is absolutely correct as to the lack of knowledge or interest of film salesmen."

THE First National producing organization in Germany—Defina—is in active production, the first picture being "Dancing Vienna," featuring Ben Lyon and Lya Mara.

Lyon was on a vacation visiting Europe and Friederich Zelnik, Defina director, saw the opportunity to enlist his services in the picture, so cable arrangements were made with Richard A. Rowland, and Lyon is now at work. After which he will resume his vacation, so the information goes.

The Road to Economy

Ease of Credit Has Brought Abnormal Promotion and Overbuilding—Ballyhooing Weaknesses Not Good Business—Excess of Theatre Building by Some Producers Has Restricted Their Own Outlets—A Theatre-Building Moratorium Suggested—Some Inside Facts on Production and Home Office Waste—A Constructive Campaign by the Whole Industry to Rebuild Confidence Needed

By Sydney S. Cohen

(Editor's Note.—Mr. Cohen's record as an exhibitor leader and as a successful theatre owner and business man is well known. The views he expresses in this article are, in the opinion of Motion Picture News, worth the careful attention of the whole industry.)

THIS is a road which must be travelled by every industry if it hopes to prosper. The agitation anent economy of the past few weeks in our Motion Picture Industry is significant of the fact that it has made the belated discovery that it has left the main road of economic soundness and has wandered off into a detour of uneconomic and unbusinesslike extravagance.

Despite all of the front page scareheads, and despite all of the announcements from certain spokesmen in the producer ranks, I feel that they have entirely overlooked the real crux of the present situation. Apparently the knowledge of the actual seriousness of conditions has come upon some of them so suddenly that it has made them somewhat bewildered, if not a trifle panicky, and their better business sense has temporarily deserted them.

Otherwise, it is difficult to understand how they can fail to recognize the fact that they have reared a veritable Frankenstein—a monster which, if uncontrolled, bids fair to destroy those who have fashioned it.

Abnormal Promotion Era

This situation has been largely brought about by the ease of credit which has come to these companies through stock sales promoted by the national banking and financial interests which have been attracted to the Motion Picture Industry in recent years. This ease of credit is an unnatural condition, and has led to this era of abnormal promotion and overbuilding by producers in sections adequately seated and theatred. In most of these cases an individual theatre owner would build a new theatre if there were not the constant fear that some producer, controlling the distribution of quality film, would "promote" a theatre in the section. Were this fear removed, hundreds, perhaps thousands, would build or enlarge their present theatres and beautify them; but individuals hesitate to hazard their own money now when they are opposed by interests who are using other people's money—the public's.

When an Industry or an ordinarily well-managed business becomes unduly wasteful or extravagant, it recognizes that fact and sets in force a policy of retrenchment and of economic sanity. It does this in a quiet, efficient, businesslike way along business lines; in quiet conferences whereby ways and means are devised to effect real reductions in costs and in the elimination of waste.

It is not the custom for a well-conducted and sound industry to ballyhoo and publicise its weaknesses as has been done in our industry during the past few weeks. That is neither good business nor good showmanship. A producer, in his announcements, does not accentuate the faults of his pictures; he emphasizes their virtues. An exhibitor, having a poor or indifferent picture, does not ballyhoo that fact to the public, he rather calls attention to that portion of his show which is good—at least he does if he is a showman.

Restricted Outlets

I think I can show that this excess of theatre expansion on the part of producing companies has literally restricted their own production outlet. They have not wiped out competition by their activities, nor have they done much good for themselves as yet.

In my judgment, the net income from the pictures produced by two or three companies is insufficient, as was stated by the head of the producing department of a large producing-distributing-exhibiting company, because they have restricted the amount of money that it is possible for them to take in on these pictures by their campaigns of getting not only show windows in the downtown sections of large cities, but by acquiring theatres in the neighborhood sections of these cities, as well as in the smaller communities.

Sydney S. Cohen

This activity has forced other large and substantial producing companies to build equally large theatres in the downtown sections of these same cities to protect their own investment as producers, by thus affording them an outlet for their product. The intense and somewhat unnatural competition of these competitive theatres has brought about an increased overhead in the operation of the theatres far beyond sensible proportions, and also has brought about the reduction of admission prices in many sections of the country, and this general overseating and overtheatring of already adequately theatred sections has come about with no thought of business sense, let alone any regard of business ethics. The disastrous effect of this cannot be over emphasized. It is tending to make all theatre building to be viewed with suspicion.

It has thus become necessary for these producing companies to play their own pictures, regardless of box office value, in their own theatres together with those of the one or two companies affiliated with them. If the pictures of these particular companies do not happen to prove exceptional box office "draws" and do not register, and the pictures of other producers happen to possess excellent entertainment values and are thus better liked by the motion picture-going public, these producer-owned theatres must of necessity forego the opportunity of playing such worthwhile productions. This constant playing of their own pictures naturally has prevented these pictures from having as wide a distribution outside of their own company as they would have had otherwise, and this condition naturally limits the revenues accruing from the rental of these pictures. This is especially true when an "added attraction" costing, say, ten to twelve thousand dollars a week is playing at one of their houses with one of their pictures; in this case the amount charged off against the picture must be negligible indeed, a situation far different from those days when they depended on the picture alone to attract the public into their theatres, and thus were enabled to pay about 17½ per cent of the gross receipts for film rental alone. Now there is really no price on their own film.

I am convinced fully that if a moratorium of some stipulated period, a few years at least, as I urged before, were to be declared against theatre building by producers, excepting in such downtown sections of the very large cities as are required as show windows for their product, that much of the chaos existing at present would be restored to order. This is a thought deserving of the most careful consideration.

"Wings"

Reviewed by Edwin Schallert

Editor of The Los Angeles Times Preview and Special Correspondent of Motion Picture News

LOS ANGELES, August 10 (By Wire).—At last the picture that the trade has been waiting for from the Paramount Famous Lasky organization. "Wings" gains that distinction.

It has an impressive magnitude and spectacular grandeur that will be far-reaching, not to speak of moments of touching humanness. Coming at this particular juncture when the interest in the conquest of the air is at its height, "Wings" would seem to be an ideal sales product. Even a quotation from a Lindbergh speech, extolling the accomplishments of the war aviator, has been used to tie the picture up with the present.

Perhaps I am seeing more in this picture than will be casually observed by the theatregoer, but my deductions were obtained during a view in a cold projection room in Hollywood without the effects which accompany the production in its initial showing in New York. Paramount is presenting this film, of course, with a remarkable accompaniment of sound. They are showing it with machines to duplicate the noise of the airplanes, both as they "take off" and rise into the air, and while they are in midflight. The sound effects distinguish between the American planes, and the Fokker and the huge, lumbering Gotha of the Germans.

All manner of aircraft are engaged in the bigger battles of "Wings." Most of the fights between them transpire above the clouds. The planes swoop down upon one another, sometimes like eagles and sometimes seemingly like infuriated bees. There is "shot" after "shot" during these battle scenes of disabled aircraft, smoking and swirling, falling down through the clouds to the earth.

The story is keyed in a rather easy tempo. There seems only one serious lapse, and that is between the time when one catches a last glimpse of the aviators in their American training camp and next picks them up in France.

One wishes that the company had availed themselves at this point of the opportunity to explain, if only briefly, more of the technique of flying. It would perhaps have made some of the maneuvers in the air more forceful in the earlier battle encounters. However, such explanation might have proved too technical in character, requiring too much footage.

One senses about "Wings" an illuminating fact about the World War, and that is that the key to what happened on the battlefield centered to a great extent in the sky. The ground maneuvers in "Wings" gain interest and vigor because most of them are "shot" from an elevation, whether this elevation be a flying plane or such an eminence as a constructed camera platform. This brings to mind the thought that in the photography of the future, for long shots particularly, we may far more often than now vision ourselves as looking down from a height at what happens on a location or set.

The story of "Wings" centers primarily in two youths who enter the aviation service—portrayed by Charles Rogers and Richard Arlen. Another prominent role is allotted to Clara Bow. Jobyna Ralston is also featured but her part is incidental to the other three, she being the girl who remained at home, while Miss Bow enters the war as an ambulance driver. Miss Bow will be greatly liked in this role, which is both pepful and sympathetic. She saves the hero, during a sequence in Paris, at the cost of her own reputation.

There is a very tragic side to the story. A young aviator, played by Arlen, is killed by his buddy, who mistakes him for a German invader. This scene is the dramatic climax of the picture.

There is a pitiful impression in all this of the utter and hopeless uncertainty of all warfare, and the boomerang that it may prove in its tragedies. Although it glorifies air warfare, "Wings" carries a curiously effective message for peace.

William Wellman directed this production and has done a job that is, in most ways, remarkable. The picture is founded on a story by John Monk Saunders, which must have provided excellent material. Hope Loring and Louis D. Lighton made the very interesting adaptation.

The Road to Economy: By Sydney S. Cohen

The waste that goes on at the production center is sinful. While I do not propose to mention names or deal in personalities, it might not be amiss to mention here some information that has come to me from a very high source.

When our highest salaried stars grant herself—or himself—a two or three months' vacation in Europe or in this country, the salary for this vacation period is not paid by their company but it is added to the budget of their next picture, or spread out over two or three pictures. This added "exhibition value" is paid by the theatre owner eventually, and is surely both unfair and uneconomic. While the theatre owner pays this, the producer does not really get it, as it represents waste, and I believe it is the biggest reason for the need of real "economy" at the studios and in the production companies.

In some companies it is well known to theatre owners who are conversant with the actual conditions, and I happen to have some pertinent facts regarding this, that for pictures costing very much more than pictures equally as good, or better, as made by other companies, at least half of the cost of the picture was spent on everything but the picture.

In one production recently finished on the Coast, the star of this picture had not worked for almost a year. All that time she drew her salary and three other members of her family, acting as business managers or otherwise, drew their salaries, and before the director turned a crank on the production, the picture carried an overhead cost or accumulated overhead of about $250,000. The picture was started, work had proceeded for about two weeks when the star decided she did not like the evening gown worn throughout the two weeks' work, so the scenes were retaken at an expense of about $50,000. The completed picture cost a tremendous fortune, but if this production were made less wastefully and extravagantly, it would have cost about one-third of the amount expended.

I am told that just a few weeks ago, a company completed a picture in six weeks and when the picture was previewed, they decided to take out the leading man and substitute another, which was done. This necessitated retaking five weeks' work. It seems hardly fair or equitable that colossal blunders like these should be supported and paid for by the Industry.

The producer can do away with many of the parasitical and non-productive forces that are taking so much out of the Industry and contributing nothing helpful. I mean particularly from the first purchasing of either a story or a play or a book, where the manipulation and "cut ins" to different interests add considerably to this initial cost.

Get Rid of Parasites

Instead of "watching pennies" by curtailment of trade paper advertising, it would be better business for these producing companies to rid themselves of production parasites. Real economies would be effected as a result.

All of this extravagant waste in the studios and in the home office bears out fully, I think, my contention that a Frankenstein

New Season Off With a Rush

Many Important Pictures in Offing as Autumn Approaches; Several to Have World Premieres Shortly

WITH several Broadway theatres being groomed for world premieres, the 1927-28 season officially opens with the industry training all its guns for a broadside at a common target—supremacy in a year that promises the stiffest competition.

One of the most immediate of the openings is the much discussed Paramount aviation special, "Wings," which comes to the Criterion shortly after several postponements. An advance review of this by Edwin Schallert on the Coast appears elsewhere, and rates its signficance highly.

Paramount's regular releases for the first quarter will include an unusual number of pictures which have already proved their merit and draw at advance engagements. In August, for instance, the schedule includes "Beau Geste;" "The Covered Wagon" once more; "Metropolis," which did such unexpectedly good business on Broadway; "Mme. Pompadour," one of the best to come from England; and "Hula," which should be an absolute "natural." In September will come, among others, "Chang," the sensation of New York; "Stark Love," another outstanding surprise; and several more. In the September list are such tested films as "The Rough Riders" and "The Way of All Flesh," and a promising Western special in "Jesse James," the first Fred Thomson for P F L.

The outstanding event on First National's immediate program is the world premiere next Monday night at the Globe theatre, New York, of "The Patent Leather Kid." Edwin Schallert recently reviewed this on the Coast, and give it warm praise.

On August 1, First National had completed fourteen of its 1927-28 pictures—a record for this company. We hear some very fine things of several of these. "Camille," which will be released generally in September, has already demonstrated its pulling power. Another Barthelmess, "The Drop Kick," will be available in September, and the next Sills, "Hard Boiled Haggerty," will be ready this month. Billie Dove's first starring vehicle, "The Stolen Bride," is an August release, and her next, "The American Beauty," has been completed and will be released in October.

The next big Fox event will be the premiere of "Sunrise," which is to take place on Broadway in September. This, we hear, is an artistic triumph. "What Price Glory" and "Loves of Carmen" head the regular releasing schedule. Other interesting subjects not yet assigned a date are "Bride of the Night" and "Grandma Bernle Learns Her Letters."

Columbia starts off auspiciously with "The Blood Ship" as the first of its thirty releases. "Alias the Lone Wolf" and "Sally in Our Alley" are second and third.

Universal will launch its season on August 21 with the opening of "Les Miserables" at the Central Theatre in a 12-reel version. On September 3 the company will again have the Colony Theatre in New York, and will open with "The Cat and the Canary," which has been highly praised. It is hoped that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" will be ready for the Central on September 25, which is the 75th anniversary of the play's premiere. Other specials to follow include "The Big Gun," "Show Boat," "Love Me and the World has been erected which threatens a great industry. This threat can be averted by a sensible getting together in conference with the end in view of eliminating all waste, insofar as is possible, and of opening new avenues of attracting many millions of new patrons for the motion picture theatres.

I sincerely hope that the negative note recently sounded in the newspapers of the country about the need for economy will not create in the minds of the motion picture going public the thought that the entire industry is unsuccessful or poorly managed. We all know that the public likes to follow the crowds and loves a winner, and I urge for the attention of all producers in this industry the commencement of a campaign for the concerted use of the united man power, brain power and screen power of the industry to bring the above thought about. An intensive, constructive and countrywide industry institutional advertising campaign, launched in the newspapers, on billboards, in magazines, and in the industry's trade press both national and regional, would so increase interest in and knowledge of the motion picture that it would inaugurate a greater movie era, in that it would bring into our theatres everywhere millions of people who are not now patrons of the Motion Picture. Producers and theatre owners alike would profit, and the resultant increase of income would cause such a lessening of overhead expense that real economies would be effected.

The saturation point in production extravagances and unbridled theatre building has been reached. Sane, well-balanced minds have called a halt; and the call will be heeded. We, the motion picture industry, really rank fourth among the world's great industries, and it is high time we realized it, and acted accordingly.

Great industries are not built up by pyramiding. Expense and extravagance are not the sign posts marking the pathway to success, but efficiency and ethics are.

No Marked Increase in Volume of Short Subjects

CONTRARY to a report recently circulated among New York's film trade that there would be a surplus of two reel and other short subjects due to the Paramount Famous-Lasky's and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's entry in this field, the situation as viewed from an analysis of 1927-1928 production schedules of the leading producers appears to be practically unchanged as compared with the previous season's output.

Paramount Famous-Lasky and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer plan to produce a total of 82 two reel features for the 1927-28 season but this increase is offset by production cuts of 26 from Fox Films, 26 from Pathe and 26 from Educational, leaving a difference of but 4. Schedules of Universal and F B O appear to be about the same as last year.

Educational will produce 8 Big Boy's, 8 Lupino Lane's, 8 Lloyd Hamilton's, 6 Tuxedo's, 6 Dorothy Devore's, 8 Larry Semon's and 16 Mermaids, making a total of 60 two reel features. In the one reel class, they will release 26 Cameo comedies, 12 Hodge Podge, 13 Bruce scenics, 26 Felix cartoons, 12 Curiosities, and the 104 issues of Kinograms.

Universal has a large schedule which consists of 52 Stern Brothers, 12 Collegiate, 12 Andy Gump and 12 Newlywed, all two reel features, making a total of 86. This company will also make 52 Western featurettes and in the single reel field, 6 Charles Puffy-Octavus Cohen comedies, 25 Oswald cartoons, 5 serials of at least 10 episodes each and the 104 issues of Universal News.

Paramount Famous-Lasky will make a total of 52 two reel features consisting of 36 from Christie, 6 Edward Everett Horton and 10 Novelties. In addition, this company will release 26 Krazy Kat cartoons, 26 Out of the Inkwell and the 104 issues of Paramount News.

In the two reel field, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will have 10 Our Gang comedies, 10 Hal Roach-Charlie Chase and 10 Hal Roach All Star, making a total of 30. There will be 25 additional subjects—most of them single reels. Also 6 Great Events in Technicolor and the M-G-M News.

Pathe will release 58 two reel features which can be divided into four groups: Sennett, Roach, Langdon and Henry and Polly. There will be 12 Mack Sennett's, 12 of The Smith's, 12 Sennett Girl comedies, 2 Ben Turpin's, 2 Harry Langdon's, 4 Our Gang, 3 Charlie Chase, 8 Roach Star comedies and 3 Henry and Polly's. In addition, 52 Fables, 52 Topics of the Day, 26 from Grantland Rice, 12 Rarebits, 7 Will Rogers Abroad and the 104 issues of Pathe News.

Fox Films have probably made the greatest cut in short subject production schedules inasmuch as this season there will be but 26 two reel features as compared with an output of 52 for last season. This company will release 10 Imperials, 8 Animal comedies and 8 of the Van Bibber brand. There will also be 26 Fox Varieties and the 104 issues of Fox News.

The 36 two reel features to be released by F B O consists of 12 of the Witwer Beauty Parlor series, 12 Micky McGuire, 12 of the Standard Fat Man Comedies and 2 single reel Newslaffs.

Industry Has Been Under Probe Since April, Says Investigator

L. T. PLUMMER, investigator for the Department of Justice, stated on a visit to Philadelphia during the week that investigation of the film industry by the government has been under way in all parts of the United States since April.

According to Plummer the department is gathering data wherever available in order to determine if the anti-trust laws are being violated. The investigation, he declared, was entirely apart from the findings of the Federal Trade Commission in the Paramount case.

The initial action, it is said, was taken when charges were made by Frank J. Rembusch, Indiana exhibitor leader, alleging that the Hays organization and its members are operating in restraint of trade. The Pathe-P. D. C. and Stanley-West Coast First National deals also are said to have been responsible for the probe.

Pictures Great Educators

Milliken Tells Educators 51,056 Theatres Are Serving As School Rooms

BEFORE a meeting of the World Federation of Education Associations held in Toronto Tuesday of this week, Carl E. Milliken, Secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, declared that the 51,056 motion picture theatres in the world today are serving as school rooms in which the children of all nations are being taught tolerance of all other nations.

Milliken said countless millions of persons of all races and of all ages are being acquainted with the ideas and ideals of other races through motion pictures of world wide interest, and in this fact lies a great hope for the eventual outlawing of war.

Continuing his address, Milliken said:

"The acquisition of this knowledge of world affairs and of current history is salurary and wholesome in bringing to the people of all nations, especially to the children who are the raw material upon which builders of world peace must operate, increased understanding and friendship for all other nations.

"Motion picture lenses today are focused on every important happening in every land. They witness the pageantries and tragedies of nations. They hold up a mirror, as it were, to every phase of human activity with accuracy and vivid realism, and they help us form clearer judgments of the ceaseless work of nations. No longer is it true that half the world ignores what the other half is doing."

Mr. Milliken voiced the hope that the World Federation of Education Associations would themselves some day sponsor the production of a series of pictures revealing the significant characteristics of all nations. Such pictures interchanged between the nations, would do much, he declared, to remove the intolerance that ignorance of each other's aims and purposes engenders.

In stating that there are now 51,056 motion picture theatres listed in the world, Mr. Milliken divided them as follows: 20,500 in the United States, 19,773 in Europe, 2,000 in Canada, 3,692 in the Far East, 1,932 in Latin America, 490 in Africa and 69 in the Near East.

"Never Say Die" Spirit Keeps Show on in Flood

AS an example of the indomitable spirit of Southern exhibitors, W. E. Callaway, Southern sales manager for First National, cites the instance of the manager of the Theatre in Marked Tree, Arkansas, whose theatre stood upon a knoll and was untouched by the destroying flood waters. The exhibitor kept the house open to the public on the customary two or three days a week. His patrons came by boat instead of by auto, but the performance each time found a line of boats parked around the entrance to the theatre, says Mr. Callaway.

The First National executive is back at his desk in the First National home office after a tour of three weeks' of the Southern exchanges.

New Season Off With Rush

Is Mine," "The Man Who Laughs" and "The Cohens and Kelly in Paris."

F B O's schedule for the next three months includes 15 features, with "Breed of Courage" leading off the season. Other leading pictures during the first quarter will be "The Great Mail Robbery," "The Coward," "Clancy's Kosher Wedding," "The Gingham Girl," "Shanghaied," and a number of Westerns with promising new stars.

Of the 13 specials to be made by Warner Bros. this year, nine will be completed by September 15. These will be "The Jazz Singer," "Ham and Eggs," "The Fortune Hunter," "The First Auto," already shown here; "Old San Francisco," now on Broadway; "When a Man Loves," "The Missing Link," "The Better 'Ole" and "Don Juan," all of which have been prereleased.

Five pictures for next season have already been completed for United Artists, and three others, "The Circus," "Th Darling of the Gods" and "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," will be finished by the end of 1927. Mary Pickford's first in some time will be "My Best Girl," more than half finished. Norma Talmadge in "The Dove," Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson, "Corinne Griffith in "The Garden of Eden," Fairbanks in "The Gaucho," Barrymore in "Tempest," "Ramona," "Topsy and Eva," "The Devil Dancer," "Sorrell and Son" and new Keaton and Samuel Goldwyn productions are among the product coming along.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has many specials in its fall group, including "The Big Parade," "Ben Hur," "Annie Laurie," "Rose-Marie," "In Old Kentucky," "Napoleon," a French special effort, and "Mlle. from Armentieres," an English film of considerable interest. "The Garden of Allah," Rex Ingram's latest, is expected to open at the Embassy in New York soon, but no date has been set.

The Pathe-De Mille specials for '27-'28 will include "The Fighting Eagle," "The West Pointer," "The Wreck of the Hesperus," "The Forbidden Woman," "Hold 'Em, Yale," "Power," "The Blue Danube," "Rip Van Winkle," "Chicago," and "Craig's Wife," the last two having been outstandingly successful as Broadway plays.

The outstanding feature of Tiffany's plans is the use of the Third Dimension process, which is being applied to a special and may be applied to a number of the productions for the new season. If it lives up to anonuncements, this should be an important factor in the new season.

All of the newer distributors which can no longer be fairly classed as "independents" in the old sense of the word are making unprecedented efforts to make their product match up in quality with that of the "old line" companies. Gotham had a picture premiere at the Hippodrome last week, when "The Satin Woman" played there. Sterling, First Division, Excellent and Rayart all are making strides forward with their 1927-28 product. Each will have several specials, and the general average of the entire list will be higher than ever before.

May Film Exports Show Decline

EXPORTS of motion picture film during the month of May exhibited a drop from those of the preceding month in the case of positives, while other classes showed increases, according to figures made public by the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

Total foreign shipments for the month were 21,307,726 feet with a value of $782,671, against 27,240,114 feet with a value of $804,778 in April, it is reported.

Positive exports declined from 20,599,,245 feet valued at $559,429 in April to 16,701,364 feet valued at $433,242 in May, and positive shipments to noncontiguous territories dropped from 2,129,878 feet with a value of $29,508 to 861,057 feet with a value of $19,985.

Live Topic Films Draw Business in Ontario

THE box office importance of topical pictures has been amply demonstrated in Ottawa, Ontario, during recent weeks. Manager Ray Tubman of the Regent Theatre reported that he had secured the third best week of all times for the Regent with the showing of the pictures of Canada's Diamond Jubilee of Confederation immediately after the Ottawa celebration had taken place.

The Canadian Government's film record of the Jubilee, running to 2,500 feet was later screened at the Centre for one week and again a fine crowd attended. Manager J. M. Franklin of B. F. Keith's Theatre grabbed the Dempsey-Sharkey fight picture for showing during the World's Poultry Congress and the result was tremendous business during the whole week.

During the Ottawa visit of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, H. R. H. Prince George and Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister of Britain, Manager Don Stapleton of the Centre Theatre screened a second run of a British special, "The Making of a King," showing the Prince of Wales, and this again drew big crowds.

Year's Protection Asked Over Cheap Houses

Circuits See Grave Menace in Springing Up of "Shooting Galleries"

THE matter of protection on pictures is one that is attracting wide attention of big and small exhibitors and distributors alike and is bound to assume even larger proportions before order comes out of the present chaos. The guns of the bigger fellows seem directed against the "shooting galleries," which it is claimed are prospering beyond all measure because of a lack of protection to the higher class houses.

Chicago is seen as the storm center at present with the prospect for a national demand for extended protection. Balaban and Katz have demanded protection of one year over theatres charging an admission of less than fifteen cents. The present protection is six months. It is said the new demand is favored by distributors and big operators elsewhere, but there is no indication yet that the Balaban and Katz demand is to be met.

Harold B. Franklin, president of West Coast Theatres has taken practically the same stand as Balaban and Katz. He has termed as ruinous and unfair the competition of the fifteen cent houses, declared to be multiplying at an alarming rate on the coast and more particularly in Los Angeles County.

From the distributors' angle low admissions cut film rentals and distributors therefor are declared inclined to favor the extended protection over low admission houses, although the year proposal is not striking popular fancy, because of the time limitations on contracts.

Conditions out around Kansas City threaten a lively battle before amicable arrangements are made. First run houses of Kansas City are demanding extension of protection within a radius of sixty miles. The new demand would extend the present sixty day protection over suburban houses and action against the proposition is threatened by the exhibitors' association. The proposed clearance, if given, would include protection over Kansas City, Kan., which has a population of 135,000. Theatre owners will fight to a finish the granting of the demand, according to R. R. Biechele, who says the extended protection would kill business for towns included in the restricted area.

There will be no extension of the thirty day protection if the exchanges in Albany, N. Y., have their way, as now seems probable. During the past week, certain exhibitors have come out in a demand for longer periods of protection than now exists, but their requests have been met with flat refusal on the part of exchanges. Several of these demands have come from heads of large chains and it is claimed that if longer protection is given the little fellow will be the one to suffer. The situation is rather acute at the present time and has Film Row agog as to its possibilities.

Publix Fall Session Off

Managers Training School Discontinued Temporarily With All Man Power Supplied

THERE will not be a fall session of the Publix Theatre Managers Training School. It was originally intended to start the fourth session of the Managers School this September. However, the need of man power for the Publix Theatres can be met with the graduates of the last three sessions. Inasmuch as graduates of the Managers School were trained exclusively for the Publix Theatres it was decided to close the Managers Training School until a time when there was sufficient need of more managers to justify another session of the school.

Executives of Publix have expressed themselves as thoroughly satisfied with the work of the school graduates.

The school has been in session for two years. John F. Barry, Director of the School reports that there were approximately five hundred applications for the session that was scheduled to start this fall. The past three sessions graduated over seventy-five men and all but three of these are now engaged in theatre operation. In practically every state there is some graduate of the Publix Theatre Managers School engaged in theatre operation. Not all of the graduates are now employed by Publix. Seven other circuits have Publix Managers Training School graduates in their employ.

John F. Barry who organized the Managers School and has been director of it to date is now starting sessions of intensive training for managers now operating theatres. He just returned from New Orleans where he conducted an intensive training session for about 150 managers of the Saenger Circuit and affiliated circuits.

It is felt that sessions of intensive training for groups of managers are to be preferred to the training of new material when there may not be vacancies enough for the men trained.

Winnipeg Theatre Boom Contemplates Four New Houses by U. S. Concerns

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, is in for an immediate theatre building boom, according to local announcement, a large moving picture organization of the United States, owning hundreds of theatres in the States, having decided upon the erection of no less than four houses. A large new independent theatre is already well under way in Winnipeg also, while the Orphem Circuit has decided to erect a large house to replace the Orphem Theatre which was built in the Manitoba Capital in 1910.

Famous Players Canadian Corp. is already well established in Winnipeg with two large theatres, the Capitol and the Metropolitan, while Universal Pictures Corporation has three theatres there, the Lyceum, the Starland and the College. The third film company, whose identity has not been publicly disclosed, has arranged for the erection of a house in the downtown section of Winnipeg to seat more than 2,000 person, while the three others will accommodate 1,200 each. One will be located in the North end of the city; another at the West end of Portage Avenue, and the third in Fort Rouge, a residential suburb.

Advocates Broadcasting

Wisconsin Exhibitor Says It Is Cheaper and More Effective Publicity Medium

RADIO broadcasting from a theatre's own plant in cities with a population around 20,000 is strongly advocated by Francis M. Kadow, Manager of the Mikadow Theatre, in Manitowoc, Wis., who is in New York at present in an effort to tie up his own broadcasting station with the programs of one of the big stations of the country.

Kadow has been operating his Mikadow Theatre station for the past year as WOMT, and he declares it a better and cheaper advertising and publicity medium than anything he has ever tried. So far he has never used it for outside commercial purposes, but merely to announce his own theatre activities, and to turn the station over free to religious, civic and fraternal organizations for occasional programs.

In discussing his station Kadow said:

"The experience I have had with broadcasting at the Mikadow has convinced me that radio is an important part of the publicity and advertising schedule of picture theatres in cities around the size of Manitowoc. With me it has taken the place of the house organ and the program. We used to issue a house organ every week at an approximate cost of $125 an issue. Now I have discontinued it entirely.

"Manitowoc has a population of 18,000. According to the Assessor's figures there are 2,000 radio receiving sets in the city. I soon found that I was reaching a large share of the public through my broadcasting, and gradually did away with the house organ. I depend entirely on broadcasting for direct theatre-to-patron publicity. It costs only about half as much as the house organ in actual dollars and cents, though it takes more of my time. Of course, I use all the other channels of advertising and publicity, such as the newspapers, the billboards, the lobby displays, etc., to supplement the broadcasting."

During his stay in New York Kadow visited the home office of First National Pictures and complimented the company on its "To-Be-Weds" radio feature, which he regards as the best motion picture radio feature that has been used and upon which he is modeling a "team" that is doing part of the Mikadow Theatre's broadcasting.

Independent Exchange Operating Nationally

FOR the first time in the history of Cleveland's film trade an independent exchange will adopt national exchange methods in its mode of operation. This new complexion on the independent situation has been brought about by the entry of A. H. Fischer, formerly Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exchange manager in Minneapolis and brother of Meyer Fischer, who has lately joined the Fischer Film exchange of Cleveland as general sales manager.

Mr. Fischer will concentrate on first run engagements throughout the Ohio territory. Independent pictures are having a better break locally this year than ever before in their history. Exhibitors are ready to buy pictures on merit rather than on reputation. The addition of A. H. Fischer to the Fischer Film Exchange is reported in Cleveland as one of the most important moves that any Ohio independent exchange has ever made not only for its own advancement, but for the advancement of all independent distributors in the field. Mr. Fischer was manager of the Minneapolis Metro-Goldwyn exchange for nine years, and division manager for Warner Brothers in St. Louis territory more recently.

Production Financier Sees Reform Needs

Frank R. Wilson says Mediocre Pictures Are Driving People From Theatres

ACCORDING to a copyrighted story appearing in The Film Daily, Frank R. Wilson, production financier and director of Wesco, sees some radical changes necessary on the production end of motion pictures in order to bring down overhead costs and to keep up the standard of pictures to where they will continue to interest the picture going public.

The shutting out of outside talent and the discouraging of outside ideas, are among the greatest evils, according to Mr. Wilson, who says:

"The efforts of producers to annex all available talent have built up a wall around production, with producers drawing only from within, thus shutting out and discouraging new ideas, which might provide the betterment in quality which is now lacking.

"Mediocrity in pictures is driving people away from the box office and the sooner producers realize the fact the better it will be for all concerned. The tremendous amount of money invested in theatres must be protected by quality entertainment which is not being provided. Motion pictures are coming through a bottle and the neck is too small.

"Production is the sore thumb of the industry, made so by some of the fallacious policies now in force at the studios which have destroyed the community of interest so essential to quality production.

"Producers must realize that if the industry is to prosper, motion pictures must improve, and they are not doing so. I do not profess to know the cure. If I did I most certainly would apply it to bring about the betterment so badly needed at the present time."

Among other things Mr. Wilson said in The Film Daily story:

"The conference table system also is retarding progress. It is a case of too many cooks spoiling the broth, with producers feeling that, if, for instance, one man can write a brilliant story, the association of several other persons on the project would result in a betterment of quality in direct ratio to the number employed in its making.

"Remuneration for production workers ultimately must be on a basis determined by what they produce, which is a profit-sharing basis. New Ideas are needed from the outside. It is time for producers to pull down the walls and invite the world in to help better pictures. Some agency must be provided to encourage independent production, providing the ideas so necessary to protect the terrific investments in theatres, and the only way they can be protected is through quality entertainment."

Exchanges and Exhibitors Functioning Harmoniously

Harmony never before experienced in Kansas-Missouri theatre circles is resulting from the recent agreement of the Kansas City exchanges and exhibitors, whereby film salesmen aid the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri by soliciting new members.

"It is not a case of the exhibitors 'coming over' to the producers," said R. R. Biechele, president of the M. P. T. O. K-M., "but a case of the producers displaying their good will towards the theatre owners and their desire to co-operate to the fullest extent to strengthen the ranks of the organized force of the industry to combat unfair opposition from outside sources."

Wobber in Charge of Two More Paramount Offices

John Clark, Western Division sales manager for Paramount, announces that Herman Wobber has taken over the district management of the Salt Lake City and Denver Paramount branch offices in addition to his present four exchanges on the West Coast. Mr. Wobber is replacing Louis Marcus, who resigned to take care of his theatre properties.

Goldburg Sails for London to Produce "Comrades"

Jesse J. Goldburg, president of First Division Distributors, is now on his way to London where he will supervise personally a special production to be called "Comrades." The picture may be made with a British and American cast. There are in Britain a number of American stars under contract to James Ormont.

British Film Imports Indicate Gain

BRITISH imports of motion picture films show considerable growth during the first six months of 1927 as compared with the same period of 1926, but the aggregate footage was still approximately only one-third that of 1925 according to advices to the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., from the American Consulate-General, London, England.

The increase over 1926 amounted to 30,000,000 linear feet, and of this quantity nearly 27,000,000 linear feet related to blank film, positives showing a rise of 2,000,000 linear feet, and negatives the balance. Positive films comprised rather less than 10,000,000 feet, or about one-sixth of the total aggregate, while negatives formed about one-twelfth.

Re-exports in the current half year were less than one-half the volume shipped in 1926, and but slightly more than in 1925; blank film fell by 9,000,000 linear feet, compared with 1926, but was more than double the re-exports of two years ago; positive film was 1,700,000 linear feet lower than in 1925. Negative film recorded an increase over 1926 of 700,000 feet. The aggregate of re-exports reached 8,063,887 linear feet, compared with 16,713,964 linear feet in 1926 and 7,656,105 linear feet in 1925.

Key City Reports

New York City

AS the new season nears, things along Broadway show signs of increased activity. Word has gotten around that "The Big Parade" will be at the Astor only a few weeks longer and receipts last week showed a healthy boost.

"Seventh Heaven" is by no means doing capacity at the Harris, but goes along steadily and no complaints are heard.

"The King of Kings" was not without its slump, but last week brought a smiling face back to the box-office.

"Camille" rounded out its fifth week at the Rivoli and departed.

"The Way of All Flesh" is below the splendid business of the first few weeks, but with any sort of a decent break in the weather should go along for some time at the Rialto.

"Old San Francisco" and Vitaphone in their sixth week at Warners showed some improvement, but will probably wind up before long.

The Capitol had a good second week on "12 Miles Out"; "Madame Pompadour" made a very fair showing at the Paramount; the Strand did not seem to fare well with "Lonesome Ladies"; business at the Roxy was excellent with "Painting the Town."

St. Louis

MIXED weather brought mixed business to the first runs and neighborhood houses of St. Louis and vicinity the past week, and taken as a whole business might be classed fair to middling. Nothing to get excited about either way. Not even the best press agent in the world could claim record breaking business for any show in town, with the exception possibly of the Municipal Opera in Forest Park—which after all has nothing to do with pictures.

Brooke Johns who revived interest in the Missouri during his stay there is departing on a vacation trip to his farm in Maryland and put on a real good stage show at the Grand boulevard "picture" palace and enjoyed a good week. The screen offering was "See You in Jail."

Just up the street the St. Louis Theatre had an average week for this season with "The Clown" on the screen and some good Orpheum Circuit vaudeville on the stage.

The Ambassador Theatre offered "The Stolen Bride" on the screen, while Herbert Rawlinson dubbed his stage show "Around the Town."

Loew's State had a fair week with "Twelve Miles Out" on the screen and a stage show that featured some well formed bathing and diving girls.

Detroit

COOL weather and excellent midsummer attractions helped to pull down heavy receipts at the main feature theatres this week.

The Hatton-Beery team, however, fell somewhat below the coinage set for "Fireman, Save My Child," at the Adams. This pair usually packs the houses in this city from the orchestra pits clear out to the sidewalks. In view of their previous successes, they flopped badly. But customers did crowd the ticket office at times and just enough to warrant a second week's showing. The cash will undoubtedly increase next week.

"The First Auto," in the Madison, went over big during the first week's showing. From all indications, the financial reports here will show an exceedingly heavy profit at the end of its run. Local interest in this attraction runs high. All performances went over big.

Throngs also witnessed the fate of Ben Lyon and Claudette Colbert in the Capitol photoplay, "For the Love of Mike." Business was good during the early and latter parts of the week. Stage attractions helped.

Considerable tabulating was done on the reissue of "Quicksands," with Richard Dix, at the State, where a stage show is always featured in connection with the films. The gross at the ticket windows was immense throughout the greater portion of the week.

Los Angeles

JACK MULHALL and Dorothy Mackail are supplying the laughs this week at Loew's State in, "Smile, Brother, Smile." This picture appears to be the best received of all the downtown attractions.

"Metropolis" at the Metropolitan is attracting average business with a Fanchon and Marco prologue, "Sea Nymphs," the most beautiful they have yet staged at the theatre.

The Criterion and the Million Dollar report large attendance at the showings of "The Big Parade" and "Beau Geste."

Judging from the box office receipts, Monte Blue, who is playing in "The Brute," is a favorite with the Uptown patrons. Dave Good is supplying his usual snappy musical entertainment.

Grauman's Chinese Theatre, the mecca of California tourists, reports splendid box office receipts with "The King of Kings."

Fred Miller of the Carthay Circle Theatre is elated over the tremendous hit of "Seventh Heaven," now in its fourth month and still playing practically to capacity.

Boston

WHILE the week's business has been inclined to be "spotty" in some instances, on the whole the week has been satisfactory for this season of the year. Cooler weather with frequent showers has aided. Opening of two legitimate playhouses after being dark for many weeks has not appeared to interfere with box office receipts at the motion picture houses.

Loew's State has played to good houses throughout the week. Phil Spitalny and his players have moved along to the Loew's Orpheum and have been succeeded by a group of fifteen in "The Whirl of Splendor" with Sissle and Blake in Negro songs. This move has brought increased attendances to both theatres. Spitalny goes next week to Baltimore. "Painting the Town" was the film at the State and "Twelve Miles Out" at the Orpheum, both winning general commendation.

"Time to Love" is the film at the Metropolitan, which has appealed to the mid-summer audiences. It is considerably lighter in vein that "Metropolis" and "The Covered Wagon" which have been featured the past two weeks, and the diversion appears to have met with ready response. Gene Rodemich continues as a stage attraction with Cambria's "Non-Stop to Mars" as the somewhat fantastic accompanying presentation.

Sissle and Blake, who appear in person at the State, are heard in the Vitaphone numbers at the twin houses, Modern and Beacon. "The Last Outlaw" is the melodrama feature film with the sensational "The Secret Studio" as companion picture of the double bills at both houses. Box office receipts are entirely satisfactory at both.

Following a three weeks' run of "Beau Geste" at the Fenway, that theatre is this week playing a split week, with "Not for Publication" and "Rolled Stockings" the first half and "Barbed Wire" and "Is Zat So?" as the double bill the last half. The innovation has grossed well and will be continued for a while.

Other theatres reporting good business for the week include the Washington Olympia, playing "The Prince of Headwaiters," Keith-Albee Boston with "Rich But Honest," "Not for Publication" at the Scollay Square Olympia and "Captain Salvation" at the Bowdoin.

Philadelphia

NOTWITHSTANDING the mid-summer season, business in the down town houses was fairly satisfactory during the week.

Adolphe Menjou in "Service for Ladies" at the Stanley lined up the crowds each evening. The sixteen Tiller Girls and Ilse Marvenga were added attractions.

The Fox with Jetta Goudal in "Fighting Love" backed by an excellent surrounding program including Muriel La France, Caites Brothers and the Thirteen Parisienne Redheads reported a good week.

The Arcadia with Irene Rich in "The Climbers" played to average summer business.

"The Night of Love" drew well at the Palace, while the Karlton with Richard Dix in "Quicksands," maintained an average standard.

"Convoy" elaborately exploited at the Victoria repeated the success which it scored recently at the Stanton.

The Stanton with a first showing of "Dance Magic" reported good box office receipts.

"Lost at the Front" did not prove a particularly good drawing card at the Globe and business was only fair.

"Broadway Nights" with Lois Wilson at the Capitol played to average business.

Seattle

WARM, almost hot, summer weather last week caused a considerable slump in motion picture business. That is, with the exception of the Fifth Avenue Theatre, which continued to pack the crowds in. The Fifth Avenue, with "Manpower" on the screen and Eddie Peabody on the stage, had waiting lines every night in front of the house. These two attractions, with a Fanchon-Marco stage revue, succeeded in reaching the $20,000 mark for the week.

As mentioned, the other houses did not fare as well. "Dearie" at the Blue Mouse, playing a second weeks' engagement, fell off to a very noticeable extent, due to the weather and poor reports of the picture. Vitaphone subjects were only fairly well received.

The Coliseum Theatre surprised the trade by pulling close to $10,000 for the week with "Rolled Stockings" which was expected to be a small attraction at the box office. The picture was one of the unexpected hits of the summer season.

"Drums of the Desert" at the United Artists Theatre was a noticeably poor attraction that fell quite a bit below this house's average, which in itself has been none too high the last few weeks.

At the Columbia Theatre, "Ritzy" played to average business. It was well advanced and exploited, and did a fair share of business for this season.

The Embassy Theatre, playing "London," maintained its usual pleasing gross at a 25c admission policy. The screen and stage attractions at this theatre are pleasing many patrons every week, and Sam Siegel is putting across some nice exploitation for the house.

"One Increasing Purpose" at the Pantages was sufficient as a screen attraction at a vaudeville house. Business here has dropped off during the summer months.

It is interesting to note that five of the six leading downtown first run houses during the past week have played Paramount Pictures, which were formerly confined exclusively to one circuit.

San Francisco

THE picture houses of San Francisco, both down-town and residential, report good business for the past week. At the week ends the houses have been crowded in the evenings because the pictures appealed to the people and the weather was favorable.

"The Way of All Flesh," at the St. Francis Theatre, shown a third week in spite of the fact that "Beau Geste" was advertised, again went over especially big and for that reason it has been decided to show it a fourth week. It is crowding that theatre and more than bringing results. "Chang," shown at the California Theatre, has been attracting the school boys and girls as well as others.

"Topsy and Eva" featuring the Duncan sisters at the Granada Theatre filled the evenings, especially because the Duncan sisters also appeared in person. The afternoons also were filled, but not like the evenings. "After Midnight" at Loew's Warfield Theatre drew crowds, which together with the acting of Nell Kelly, a local girl, filled the house. Some claim the advertising did it. "His Dog" did well at the Golden Gate Theatre, which, together with the acts of vaudeville, ,filled the house all week. "The Honeymoon Express" shown on the screen at the Pantages Theatre pleased the audience very much, which together with the vaudeville acts filled the house.

"Red Hot Hoofs" the feature and "Close Shaves," the comedy, at the Union Square Theatre, together with vaudeville acts, crowded the theatre at all times.

In the residential districts, the Wigwam Theatre did especially well with "The Prairie King" together with the musical comedy of, "The Great Kentucky Derby." "Lost At The Front" drew a fair crowd to the Coliseum Theatre and the Casino Theatre did well with "Taxi, Taxi." The Majestic Theatre did well with "Twinkletoes," but the Avenue Theatre, which just opened and which played this same picture, did not do as well as expected with it.

Cleveland

A FEELING of autumn in the evening air, shorter days and longer evenings has been reflected in the local theatres which report a decided upward trend of business during the past week.

"The Big Parade" in its third week at the Stillman, continues to be the best box office attraction. It is being held a fourth week. This is the only picture that has survived an extended run here all summer." The Allen played to consistently good business all week with "Service for Ladies," a clever, bright, sophisticated comedy, and one of Menjou's best productions. "Rich but Honest" did a crackerjack week's business at Keith's Palace where it was surrounded by Gus Edwards' new act and other equally entertaining novelty numbers. "The Missing Link" did so well at the Cameo that it is being held a second week. It was listed by local critics as a riot of laughs. "Rubber Heels," introducing Ed Wynn to local screen fans, played to crowded houses at the State where Gertrude Ederle was the featured headline attraction.

Both Reade's Hippodrome and Keith's East 105th St. report excellent box office results with "The Outlaws of Red River," unanimously voted good entertainment by the host of Tom Mix admirers. "The Clown," playing the Hippodrome the last half of the week, suffered by comparison, but did pretty well. The Park played "High Hat" to good houses all week. The picture was well liked. The Circle continued its policy of daily change revivals. Suburban houses continue to report that business is below normal.

Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE theatre going public was a bit more active this week than last and business in the theatres picked up to a considerable extent. Weather was cool, some nights reaching a record cold weather mark for August. This sort of weather seems to go hand in hand with good business in the theatres.

The Wisconsin theatre had an unusually strong bill headed by "Rolled Stockings," with the addition of a "Million Dollar Fur Fashion Show," with twenty models to display the fur styles handled by local dealers. The Wisconsin set a good attendance record with this program. "Down the Stretch" was the feature at the Alhambra with George "Freckles" Ward of "Our Gang'' fame as an added attraction. The Merrill drew crowds with the Dempsey-Sharkey fight pictures. This week's picture was ''Broadway Nights,'' which shared the popularity of the fight pictures. ''All Aboard'' drew fairly good houses at the Strand during the week. ''Slaves of Beauty'' was featured at the Garden and did good business.

Business in the neighborhood houses was also given impetus by the cooler weather. ''Rough House Rosie'' was very well received by patrons of the Oriental. ''The Winning of Barbara Worth'' brought in good business to the Modjeska. ''Captain Salvation'' did fairly well at the Tower. Patrons of the Milwaukee were well pleased with ''The Better 'Ole'' and business was good.

Kansas City

COOLER weather proved a boom to business among the first run houses of Kansas City this week, although the lineup of pictures was a comparatively strong one, despite the weather.

At the Newman, Adophe Menjou in ''Service for Ladies,'' played to large crowds all week. At the Royal ''Chang'' did a good second week's business. ''The Poor Nut,'' at the Mainstreet, with Charlie Murray and Jack Mulhall, held up well all week. ''Old San Francisco,'' in conjunction with the Vitaphone presentation at the Globe, attracted good audiences, while ''Is Zat So?'' at the Pantages did a larger week's business than any previous picture in several weeks.

''On Ze Boulevard,'' with Renee Adoree and Lew Cody, at the Liberty did a good matinee business, while the crowds at night were larger than usual.

Ottawa

THE Dempsey-Sharkey fight picture and an Irish film comedy formed practically the whole show at Ottawa, Ontario, during week of August 1. The Canadian Capital was crowded with visitors for the World's Poultry Congress and for the official visit of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales.

The popular hit of the week was the fight film which was shown exclusively at B. F. Keith's Theatre along with ''The Night Bride.'' Manager Franklin had the biggest week in months.

''The Callahans and the Murphys'' at the Regent Theatre also proved to be an exceptional attraction, although some complaints were made to Manager Ray Tubman by Irish patrons who could not see the point.

''The Whole Town's Talking,'' during the first half of the week at the Centre Theatre, rather suffered by comparison but ''Time to Love,'' starring Raymond Griffith, during the last three days, was liked better and had a fair run.

The Imperial Theatre had fairly steady business with ''Beware of Widows,'' which ran the whole week, but this was hardly startling.

Manager James Moxley gave them plenty at the Francais and business was fair. The feature Monday and Tuesday was ''Infatuation''; on Wednesday and Thursday he started the new serial ''On Guard,'' along with ''The Belle of Broadway''; on Friday and Saturday there was a double bill, ''The Stormbreaker'' and ''The Overland Stage.''

Business at the Eden Theatre, Hull, Quebec, wasn't half bad with ''The Love Thrill,'' which had previously played in Ottawa.

Des Moines

''BEAU GESTE'' which played at the Des Moines Theatre did a very fine business. It was a way above average. The audiences were enthusiastic about the picture. Business slacked on one night, perhaps because of a circus in town. But it averaged very, very good. At the Capitol Theatre ''Fireman, Save My Child'' was regarded favorably though it is very light. It played with a strong New Idea Publix Stage Show.

Albany

SHARP contrasts were presented in the business done during the past week in the motion picture theatres of Albany and Troy. While the weather itself was fairly conducive to good business at the theatres, the American Legion Convention in Troy, which brought several thousands to the city for a three days' stay, cost the theatres of that city hundreds of dollars through falling off in patronage.

At the Troy theatre, ''The Poor Nut'' ran to only fair business during the week, but the two Vitaphone selections by the Kouns Sisters and the Four Aristocrats were exceptionally well received. At the Lincoln theatre, very ordinary business prevailed with ''Running Wild,'' but it should be borne in mind that across from the theatre there were band concerts each night of the convention.

In Albany, ''The Heart of Maryland'' at the Mark Strand probably brought more shekels to the till than at any other theatre. This picture seemed to please and business was very good, considering all angles of the situation. At the Leland, ''White Pants Willie'' drew far better than it did in Troy the week before, and probably made some money for the house. At the Mark Ritz, ''Too Many Crooks'' was panned in the newspapers during its three days' run, and fell virtually flat. ''The Black Diamond Express'' for the last three days did somewhat better. The Clinton Square theatre played to just about ordinary business with ''The Broadway Drifter'' and ''The False Alarm.'' The Mark Strand will now try out three of the big outstanding productions in as many weeks, in an effort to brace up business. This week ''Barbed Wire'' is being shown with ''The Garden of Allah'' for next week and ''Underworld'' for the third week.

Salt Lake City

THE weather in Salt Lake City has been slightly cooler during the past week, the result being that picture business has averaged very good. Exploitation has been very high in some instances, especially in regard to the showing of ''Chang'' at the Paramount Empress where advance notices were announced profusely on the screen and a big campaign in general was carried on. The picture went over very good according to Manager George E. Carpenter, and was shown as an extended run.

Exploitation was also heavy in connection with the week's run at the Pantages here of Lon Chaney in ''The Unknown,'' which picture in its extreme oddness was received very well as a whole.

The Victory management reports satisfactory results to have been gained through the featuring of W. C. Fields and Mary Brian in ''Running Wild.''

Leatrice Joy and Charles Ray in ''Vanity'' drew good summer crowds to the Gem and proved to be a pleasing presentation.

The double feature bill at the American consisted of Monte Blue in ''The Black Diamond Express,'' and ''The Whole Town's Talking.'' Good crowds here were the rule.

Central Pennsylvania

PREVALENCE of delightful weather—fair and not uncomfortably warm—combined with more than ordinarily good attractions in all the leading theatres, brought the amount of business done in the Harrisburg motion picture houses far above the average for midsummer.

Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton in ''Fireman, Save My Cihld,'' struck the popular fancy from the start, in the Victoria Theatre, and big crowds attended all week.

At Loew's Regent John Gilbert in ''Twelve Miles Out,'' went over big. Scarcely less popular was ''Hills of Kentucky,'' with Rin-Tin-Tin, the wonder dog, at the Colonial.

At the State where the picture attraction the first half of the week was Madge Bellamy in ''Colleen,'' and for the last three days Dorothy Devore in ''Mountains of Manhattan,'' there was a popular musical show, the ''Marcus Revue,'' in place of the vaudeville part of the program for the entire six days, which served to stimulate interest in the whole program and fine business was recorded.

The National, a neighborhood house, did good business with a return to Harrisburg of William Haines in ''Slide, Kelly, Slide,'' and a bill at the Russell, including William Boyd and Marquerite De La Motte in ''The Last Frontier,'' with Jack Hoxie as ''Buffalo Bill,'' obtained satisfactory box office results.

The presence of the 101 Ranch Wild West Show in Harrisburg on August 5, two performances, failed to have any adverse effect on the business of the picture theatres.

Tampa

THE show presented by the Tampa the first half of this week, in the opinion of this writer, was the best all round program ever arranged by Manager John Carroll, and Carroll has turned out some dandies too. ''Chang'' was the feature attraction. Then he had a comedy, ''Why Girls Say No,'' that was really funny. For the last half ''Service For Ladies'' was the feature. Menjou is a favorite in Tampa and he kept the business in the very good class.

Sunday at the Strand was big with ''Dance Magic'' and Monday came up very good. ''The Black Diamond Express'' opened Tuesday for a three days' run, and the opening day was the largest Tuesday of the Summer, with very good business the following two days. ''The First Night'' did well for the last two days. ''The Devil's Saddle,'' ''The Wrong Mr. Wright,'' and ''The Galloping Cowboy'' all did well at the Franklin and kept the business right up to the average.

Cutouts from the standard 24-sheet are proving an effective feature for merchant-theatre tie-ups exploiting "Babe Comes Home" (First National). Above are shown two photos illustrating how the figure of Babe Ruth was used to advantage for displays in the Spaulding store, Indianapolis, co-operating with the Circle theatre in that city. Star Identification Stunt Backed By Merchants

THIRTY "lost" Universal stars had all Columbus, Ohio, searching for them—and gave Keith's Palace, playing "Sensation Seekres," front page breaks in the Columbus Citizen.

The search was the product of A. J. Sharick's ingenuity. He secured thirty windows, most of them on High street, and in each placed a portrait of a Universal star. Ther were no names used with the pictures, only numbers, and the object of the search was to locate and identify as many stars as possible. The Columbus Citizen publicized the contest, giving the details of the search and telling their readers that there would be four cash prizes and ten pairs of tickets to Keith's Palace for the best answers. The contestants were also asked to write a 100-word essay on "Why I Like This Star," selecting one of the Universal players as the object of their affections.

Features Displays

In many cases very beautiful displays were built up around the portraits. George Lewis, star of "The Collegians," was used by a sports store and was surrounded by fishing tackle, golf bags, tennis rackets and bathing suits. Snookums lent his presence to a display of baby things.

June Marlowe, wearing a bathing suit, inspired a display of bathing caps, and Laura La Plante was surrounded by women's sports clothes.

The newspaper gave the search exceptional publicity, placing the opening story on the front page, and continuing with front page follow-ups for two or three days.

Conducts Sales Contest on Publix Chex Books

Manager Charles R. Hammerslough, of the Broadway Theatre, Newburgh, N. Y., started the Fourth with a bang that brought joy to all the boys and girls when a contest was started on the sale of Publix Chex Books.

The contest is best explained from the copy on the circulars that were given a thorough distribution throughout the city and near-by towns.

"You all have an opportunity to win a genuine Iver-Johnson bicycle, which is now on display at Myron Affron's, agent for Iver-Johnson and Columbia bicycles, at 71 Broadway. They are the World's Best and you can "Pay as You Ride."

"Just enter your name with the cashier at the box office in the Publix Chex Books Sales Contest, starting Monday, July 4th, and ending Saturday, July 23rd, a period of three weeks.

"Merely tell your friends to buy Publix Chex Books, priced at $9.00, $4.50, and $2.25, and instruct them to credit your name at the box office at the time of purchase."

"Ankles Preferred" Contest Scores in San Diego

An "Ankles Preferred" contest sponsored by the San Diego Evening Tribune proved a popular and effective exploitation stunt in connection with the picture of that title at the Pantages theatre in that city.

For twelve days the Tribune devoted from one-quarter to one half page to the contest, using photographs of the entrants, showing the ankles that the judges preferred.

The prizes included a trip to the Fox studios in Hollywood, a portrait painted by local artist and shoes furnished by the leading store in the city. The Evening Tribune assigned its staff photographer to make pictures of the entrants. The shoe store turned over its windows for two weeks, displaying enlarged photographs from the production and an announcement of the prizes.

Eliminations were held at the theatre each evening for two weeks preceding the showing of "Ankles Preferred." The winners were announced on the opening day.

Drum Tap Feature of Lobby for "Drums of Desert"

The tapping of a concealed drum in the lobby was sufficient to attract pasers-by at the Princess Theatre, San Antonio, Tex.

The lobby stunt was in connection with the exploiting of "Drums of the Desert." The lobby display consisted of a huge beaverboard drum with "Zane Grey's Drums of the Desert" printed on it. On either side of the drum cut-out were cut-outs of a cowboy and an Indian.

A large band size bass drum was placed on top of the box office where it could not be seen. The drum was made to beat by the cashier pulling a string.

An attractive front exploiting "The Better 'Ole" (Warner Bros.), arranged by Manager Hostler for the Strand, Altoona. Large cutouts on either side are from stock 24-sheet. Lettering for the entire display was made of Matilacs.

18 Houses Profit From Stunt Exploiting News Reel

By M. G. Keller

(District Manager, East Bay Division, Golden State Circuit)

AN airplane was successfully landed on a down town city street as an aid in building up city wide interest in eighteen theatres in the East Bay Cities under my direction. This event took place in Oakland and was tied up with simultaneous showings of "The Race to Paris" in the eighteen theatres of the division.

Arrangements were made with Kinograms and extra prints were obtained so that every house in our Oakland division would be able to play "The Race to Paris" while the interest stirred by the airplane stunt was at its peak.

There are any number of difficulties encountered in planning a stunt in which a plane is to make a landing in a city street. In our case there was the city ordinance prohibiting a plane from flying lower than 1,500 feet over the city, but at this particular time when Lindbergh had successfully crossed the Atlantic nothing could have been more fitting than to have "The Race To Paris" delivered by airplane. In this the City officials of Oakland joined hands with me in making this one of the most unusual publicity stunts.

Early in the morning of June 9, the day set for this hazardous feat, crowds gathered on Tenth Street where the landing was to take place. Exactly at eleven o'clock, the time set for the arrival of the plane, Major W. H. Woerner piloting a W-A-S-P plane circled above the business district accompanied by a companion plane. Major Woerner turned his plane directly into Tenth Street and came down to a perfect landing. Every available police and motorcycle officer was pressed into service to keep back the crowds that would have rushed directly in the path of the plane. The plane had been newly painted for this occasion and bore, in big letters, "Golden State Circuit Air Delivery."

The companion plane circled overhead for several minutes, making close dips to the ground, thrilling as well as frightening the crowds.

Immediately after the W-A-S-P plane landed thousands of cheering spectators surrounded it and the climax was reached when Mayor John L. Davie received the films officially for the City of Oakland and turned them over to me for showing at the Golden State Theatres.

Arrangements were made with "Kinograms" news service and the complete landing was filmed and attached to the "Race to Paris," making more of a home interest picture out of the original film. This, of course, encouraged local interest in the showing of the film.

As a follow-up for those who were unable to witness the landing, a large motor truck was secured and the airplane mounted on it. Then the plane was escorted through the business district of Oakland by a squad of motorcycle traffic officers.

Not a Breakfast Food—But Just an Advertisement

Manager J. D. Hutchinson of the Smalley Theatre in Sidney, N. Y., adopted a novel vehicle for a short and pithy advertising message about the superior entertainment offered at that house when he distributed packages, containing sawdust, and a card, carrying the house ad.

The packages, done up in brown paper bags was typically "grocery" in appearance and the message was headed "not a breakfast food, but just an advertisement."

The copy read "Just an advertisement to let you know that the best in amusement can always be found at Smalley's Sidney Theatre. You are the person that has asked for the perfect photoplay. You are the one that has demanded a brand of moving pictures that will positively assure you an evening of delightful entertainment every time it is announced. Read along with us and learn how your demands have been met. We are going to show what the name Smalley means and teach you to say to yourself and your friends: It's At Smalley's It's Got to be Good."

School Graduates Guests of Hippodrome Manager

Manager J. P. Harrison used several good stunts to put over Clara Bow in "Rough House Rosie" when that film played at the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas.

Perhaps one of the best stunts that brought in a lot of extra business was the issuance of invitations to High School and other school graduates in both Waco and the surrounding towns.

JANET GAYNOR in

"2 GIRLS WANTED"

from the play by Gladys Unger

WITH the first projection of this picture in the first theatre to play it—a new star will have come to the screen. Janet Gaynor has been made a star, not as a commercial expedient— a name on which to hang an exploitation campaign —but because the superb quality of her acting so dominates any picture in which she appears that she becomes the stellar attraction—all else is subordinate. "7th Heaven" has established this conclusively. JANET GAYNOR as Diane—what a paeon of praise has rung through the columns of the press, has sounded from the lips of her audiences! And now we have JANET GAYNOR as a star—presented first in the screen version of this spirited comedy-drama which has so proven itself in a year of solid success in New York.

JANET GAYNOR in "2 GIRLS WANTED"

A YOUNG GIRL—fighting under great handicap for the man she loves—gives battle to a domineering giant of finance in this picture made from an outstanding comedy hit of the New York stage. Drama stalks through the laugh-laden scenes. It is an "audience picture"—an ideal attraction for theatres of the best class—such as the "Roxy", where it will show first-run in New York.

JANET GAYNOR'S true genius is again strikingly displayed in an emotional gamut that plumbs the depths of poignant drama and lightly strikes its merriest notes. Behind her, Director ALFRED GREEN has gathered a cast of excellence—Glenn Tryon, Alyce Mills, Ben Bard, Joseph Cawthorne, Doris Lloyd, Marie Mosquini, William Tooker. Gladys Unger wrote the play and Seton I. Miller adapted it for the screen.

A SMALL MATTER OF GREAT IMPORTANCE

Referring of course to any one of the FOX SHORTS—whether it be one of the 104 issues of FOX NEWS; one of the 10 IMPERIAL COMEDIES, an Animal Comedy or a VAN BIBBER COMEDY—of which there are 8 each; or one of those little bits of screen witchery, FOX VARIETIES (you get 26 of these)—if it is a FOX SHORT it is important to you and to your audience, and it is class clear through!

"The Fighting Texan"
(Universal—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THE Circle O Ranch, the dishonest foreman, the honest stranger accused of rustling, the loan shark, and the rancher's beautiful daughter are the ingredients shaken up and served in the usual manner in this two-reel western which will prove entertaining to those who like the abbreviated pictures of the wide open spaces.

There is nothing apart from the regular elements that constitute all of these fast moving melodramas. The story is quite apparent after the first few shots, but nevertheless they are interesting and they are as well done as is necessary. Fred Gilman is the featured player. He has the personality and everything that goes with the Western hero type.

He, of course, is the stranger who eventually is revealed as the Texas ranger after being accused as a cattle rustler by the ranch foreman, the real rustler. Said foreman not only rustles the cattle, but also purlions Helen's money, laid aside to meet the mortgage on her father's ranch. The stranger knows just who rustles these cattle and just who stole the bankroll and he turns up the foreman in the end after some real exciting riding and battling. He is rewarded, as usual, by the hand of the beautiful daughter. But you can't take it away from these westerns, they do entertain if you are satisfied to take them as they are served, without being too critical.

"The Newlyweds' Troubles"
(Universal—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

IF the Twentieth Century or the California Limited could have Snookums as he is in this picture as a regular commuter it would no doubt cause their passengers a lot of consternation, but at the same time would also enliven what otherwise are many tedious hours on the coast-to-coast trip.

Snookums is just a whole trainload of fun on this trip of the Newlyweds. The picture fairly sparkles with it. In fact a little bit of it could be eliminated with even better results. The youngster proceeds from one jam to another and simply plays havoc with everyone aboard.

Of course there is much of the usual sleeping car humor, but there are a lot of gags and situations that are sure laugh provokers. Snookums is truly a remarkable little artist who seems to have more comedy sense than many of the grown-ups usually seen in these short subjects. Even without as good a story as this and with half the comedy the picture would hit the funny bone of nearly any audience.

"Brave Cowards"
(Educational—One Reel)

KNOW your limitations, what you can and what you cannot do. That is what Phil Dunham learned when he tried to boss his wife and disillusion her about beating up the strong man across the hall. He would have gotten away with it if he had only taken the proper mental attitude for he was getting the breaks, the strong man was well nigh down and out, and all he had to do was to play the drama just a wee bit longer and then everything would have been jake. But he didn't do this, consequently—but let us hear the facts.

A not too friendly bunch of neighbors, Dunham and his wife found it hard to get along with Estelle Bradley and Fred Spencer, the couple across the hall. So when Phil's cat starts fighting with his neighbor's dog you may be sure that the strong arms were brought into play. Dunham's strong arm was Sable Johnson, his huge Amazonian spouse, who bossed him and made him do all the the housework, while Estelle's was her own hubby, of course. The woman proves herself to be the better man, and she knocks the powerful Fred cold with a slam of her hand. This is the big stroke, the explosive kick of the comedy, but before its advent the helpless Phil had to do much scurrying from one room to another to elude Estelle's furious hubby, who suspects Phil's presence in his apartment. There's plenty of room for the laughs here; they do not crowd one another. It's an average comedy. Mark Sandrich directed. —RAYMOND GANLY.

"Keeping in Trim"
(Universal—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

DIRECTOR GUS MEINS surely tried to crowd everything he could think of along slapstick and knockabout comedy lines into this one of the "Keeping Up with the Joneses" series. In fact if he had eliminated a little bit of the rougher knockabout stuff he would probably have had a better comedy. There is such a thing as overplaying your shots.

There is undoubtedly a lot of good comedy material, with many laughable situations. There is also an abundance of alleged comedy which is not so good. Had about half of the latter been eliminated the whole thing would have been better balanced for entire family consumption. As it is it will bring great guffaws only from the younger element.

The idea in the story is a good one, starting the McGinnis family off on their daily dozen in the morning to the accompaniment of the radio announcer and eventually enrolling them into the swell athletic club to keep pace with the Joneses. All of the club paraphernalia is put into use, but could have been done so much more effectively, if not quite so hilariously. Doubtless the picture, as is, will get its laughs.

"Great Guns"
(Universal-Cartoon—One Reel)

THIS is another of the Oswald Lucky Rabbit cartoons executed by Winkler and chock full of humor. This artist has a way of putting real animation into his subjects and of injecting just enough comedy twists to keep the laughs almost continuous.

A bit of the world war atmosphere is injected into this one when Oswald kisses his sweetheart goodbye and enlists. He is next seen in the trenches dodging cannon balls and then in a bar-hand encounter with Big Bertha. Eventually he is blown to bits by a shell, but is gathered up and reconstructed by a Red Cross nurse, who proves to be his sweetheart.
CHESTER J. SMITH.

"The Mechanical Cow"
(Universal-Cartoon—One Reel)

OSWALD the Lucky Rabbitt is the milkman in this Winkler cartoon, which is just as good as those of the series that have gone before. He has the advantage of a mechanical cow in covering his route and the cow is conveniently equipped with skates to speed up the action.

An affair with a milkmaid enlivens proceedings, particularly when the maid is kidnapped in a taxi by an ogre. Oswald pursues the taxi on the back of the cow and the fun waxes fast and furious. It all sounds silly in the recounting, but the maneuvers of Oswald and the antics of the cow are surely humorous enough to bring laughter from the most critical audience. This series is bound to be popular in all types of houses if the present standard is maintained. —CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Smith's Candy Shop"
(Pathe-Sennett—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

MARY ANN JACKSON, Ruth Hiatt and Raymond McKee are the featured players in this Sennett comedy which has its moments of humor largely because of the antics of a well trained elephant, who runs amuck after having been fed some of the Smith candy, whose principal ingredient, through an error, is cement.

When Jimmy Smith gets fired from his candy store job he starts an opposition store of his own and his late employer sends him off to a poor start by substituting a sack of cement for a sack of sugar. Little Mary Ann is sent about distributing the candy samples, which she does generously, particularly to the elephant.

There is general indignation on the part of the recipients of these samples, but it is all rectified eventually and in the end Jimmy's new store takes the play entirely away from the store of his late employer. Here and there there is a good touch of comedy, but the well trained elephant just about steals the picture.

"Bubbles of Geography"
(Educational—One Reel)
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

STUFF for the children and the grown-ups. The little dog that goes in and out of these Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge series plays the gentle game of blowing soap bubbles. The bubbles drift far and wide and take in many strange sights. From the British West Indies, where clothes are washed in the rivers and Morocco where the basket weavers work in the streets the camera takes a tour through Java and we see the Javanese hard at work irrigating their fields of sugar cane. From there we jump to Maine and a bevy of young ladies who take a keen interest in water sports. These scenes are up to the average as interest holders. The children will recognize some of their old friends, also, for the animated work of Archie N. Griffith shows glimpses of Old King Cole and the Man in the Moon.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"A Hole in One"
(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

AFTER many futile attempts to ride a goat and to steer him by the horns, Al Falfa is finally butted by said goat into a golf hole, from which fact this title is derived. And the fable is: "You don't have to be crazy to play golf, but it helps."

About one-half of the real is devoted to the butting tactics of the goat in the effort to inject some humor. When Al Falfa fails he calls upon the Sheriff and the latter goes through the same sad experiences. There are one or two humorous situations, but for the most part there is entirely too much repetition.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Trolley Troubles"
(Universal-Cartoon—One Reel)

IF the first of these new cartoon comedies for Universal release is an indication of what is to come, then this series is destined to win much popular favor. They are cleverly drawn, well executed, brimful of action and fairly abounding in humorous situations.

Oswald the Lucky Rabbit, is all of that. Some of his experiences are hilarious and breath taking. He is the conductor of the suburban trolley in this one and it is a trick car that provides plenty of humor. Oswald and the car encounter all sorts of obstacles. They flatten out to run under a cow and they hurdle others, much to the consternation of the bewildered passengers. The laughs are spontaneous and there are plenty of them.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Judgment of the Hills

A Youngster Scores in Hill Drama

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

PROBABLY the most amazing thing about these stories of the Blue Ridge country is that their extreme simplicity is the very reason why they generally prove interesting. Here's a tale that would have fitted any part of the country during the early events of our entry in the Great War—yet try to hitch this simple yarn to an average locality and get the same results that the Kentucky hills yield! However, let us not lose sight of the fact that wee Frankie Darro, an unusually fine child actor, is more than little responsible for what we believe to be pretty good entertainment. Likewise, Orville Caldwell; but the boy's part not only stands out on account of his talent, but because the story demands that it does. Virginia Valli does well enough in a rather obscure role.

Young Darro, as Ted Dennison, is a wistful little mountain child who blindly worships his big hulk of a brother, Brant. The latter is fast developing into a most conscientious drinker of mountain dew—forever boastful of his great strength to an audience of tavern loafers. Interested in the welfare of both, the schoolmistress takes young Ted in hand. War is declared and Brant evades the draft. He is later delivered to the authorities by the younger brother. Next, his homecoming—covered with medals and as drunk as ever; but Ted and the schoolma'm win out.

The Cast: Virginia Valli, Frankie Darro, Orville Caldwell, Frank McGlynn, Jr., Johnny Glough. Very well directed by J. Leo Meehan.

THEME: Boy's affection and faith in older brother finally make real man of him.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Excellent direction, acting of Darro and Caldwell and mountain scenery.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Star's names; also, stress young Darro's fine work and play up as romance of Kentucky hills.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for downtown and good neighborhood trade.

Length, 5,700 feet. Released, Nov. 6, 1927.

Paid to Love

Pleasant Moments in Romantic Picture

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE are two plots that never fail to register with picture audiences—one of them concerns the Northwest Mounted, the other carries on the adventurous intrigue that involves a mythical kingdom. Both are old timers in the picture world—and when they're well done the fans are adequately entertained. "Paid to Love" is cut from the "Graustark" pattern—and offers enough variation of plot and incident to carry it away from the orthodox treatment.

The high spots are centered in an Apache dive of Paris which is being looked over by American tourists. It's very quiet in the place until the visitors enter. Then things start to pop. A girl with a knife fastened in her garter falls into the room—and she is immediately followed by an Apache—with the gendarmes in pursuit. Which is the moment for the couple to stagger through a dance. Naturally the officers and the tourists accept the hokum as genuine.

The mythical kingdom idea is projected when the visiting king decides the dancing girl is the one to arouse his son from his indifference for women. The scene shifts to the kingdom and develops much action and romance. It is finely acted by William Powell, George O'Brien and Virginia Valli.

The Cast: George O'Brien, Virginia Valli, J. Farrell MacDonald, Thomas Jefferson, Merta Sterling, Hank Mann. Director, Howard Hawks.

THEME: Mythical kingdom romance revolving around king's determination to get his son interested in women.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The Apache episode. The dance sequence. The humor. The atmosphere. The deception employed by heroine to win prince. The Captions. Clever acting by William Powell and other principals.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tease title and feature story as different. Use prologue of Apache dance if your house caters to atmospheric numbers. Play up principals.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for average houses. Should please them.

Produced and distributed by Fox.
Length, six reels. Released, July, 1927.

Straight Shootin'

Western Fare With New Profiles

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

TWO introductions are in line with this first of a series of six Western features to be produced by Universal during the 1927-28 season. First, we have Ted Wells, the featured player, a two-fisted, hard-riding young fellow who rather looks and acts like Jack Dempsey, and who has not yet become so used to production activities that he hasn't still some natural modesty. He promises well. Next, we have another newcomer to Westerns—Lillian Gilmore—a Gish-like little girl with a most attractive screen personality, who also should win her fans.

Outside of the foregoing interest it's just another Western picture that exhibitors will find measures up pretty near as good as any of its kind. There are the usual real Western backgrounds, riding, fighting and gun-play—all handled well under the direction of William Wyler. The inevitable coup de grace as applied by the hero to the villain lacks the éclat of some of the more finished Western stars—but that will come with a little more experience. The story is the conventional one of an oppressed miner and his daughter. A gang want possession of the mine, and use a starvation method. Mr. Wells naturally frustrates the scheme. We almost forgot to mention Garry O'Dell. Garry is the humorist of this occasion.

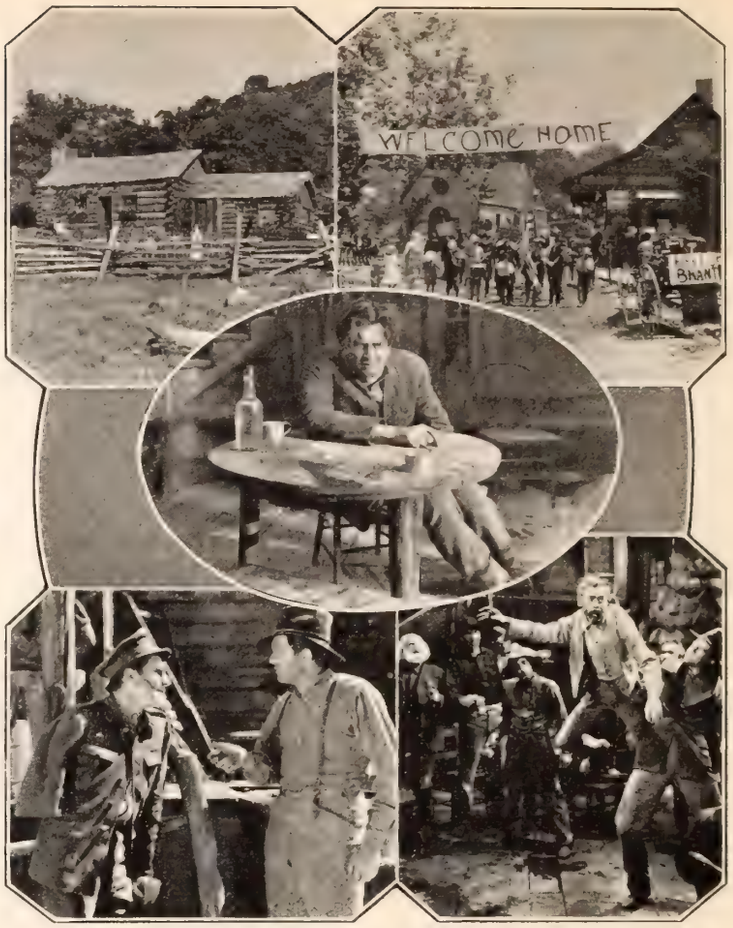
THEME: Western melodrama in which wandering cowboy and pal frustrate scheme to rob miner.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Good Western backgrounds, direction, riding and fighting.



EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Western ballyhoo and tell them you have a couple of interesting newcomers whom you'll guarantee they will like.

DRAWING POWER: For any house catering to Western patronage.

Produced and Distributed by Universal Films.
Length, 4,205 feet. Release date, Oct. 16, 1927.

Topsy and Eva

Mostly Slapstick, But Fairly Amusing

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE Duncans (Rosetta and Vivian), have brought their "Topsy and Eva" to the screen, and the result does not measure out the entertainment of the stage version. The sisters, where supported by girls and music, brought considerable color to the musical comedy pattern of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The picture, however, emphasizes its shortcomings. And one can't get away from the idea that it is a vehicle for their emotions. It gives away to comedy most of the time, though pathos creeps in to keep company whenever Vivian enters the scene. She makes a likely Eva—and screens like the w. k. million dollars. But it is Rosetta, the comic member of the team, who carries most of the action. As Topsy she frolics and cuts up an assortment of didoes.

Otherwise the piece doesn't reveal much to intrigue the imagination. There is very little characterization, most of the footage being devoted to planting the comedy. Rosetta is a gifted comedienne and releases much amusing incident.

The picture could be profitably shortened. Its comedy is stretched too much to carry through seven reels. There isn't much of the spirit of the old-time Tom shows about it. The merits, however, dominate the faults.

The Cast: Rosetta Duncan, Vivian Duncan, Gibson Gowland, Noble Johnson, Marjorie Daw, Myrtle Ferguson, Nils Asther, Henry Victor. Director, Del Lord.

THEME: Comedy-drama based upon "Uncle Tom's Cabin," with Topsy carrying most of the plot.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Rosetta Duncan's comedy. Screen appeal of Vivian. Scenes of michievous Topsy and Ophelia. Atmosphere.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up Duncan Sisters, exploiting Vivian's screen appeal and Rosetta's comedy. Feature as film version of musical comedy.

DRAWING POWER: Should be good matinee picture. Has appeal for children. Suitable for all types of houses.

Produced and Distributed by United Artists.
Length, seven reels. Released, August, 1927.

Dance Magic

Jazz Story Has Glitter But Not Much Depth

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

FROM the stern, hard, almost dirgeful atmosphere of a Puritanical New England home "Dance Magic" before many of its sequences have been unreeled slips into a more modern groove where the predominating tempo is speed and jazz. An adaptation of the story by Clarence Buddington Kelland, it has many of the meaty moments that our Kellands, Wrights, Beaches and other best-selling novelists are wise enough to insert into their tales. But though the story can claim a truly jazzy mood where pagan routes, energetic dancing and the like culminate in a murder it is not any too convincing and this because the display seems to have been spread on too thick and because your sympathy is never extended to the heroine and her mistaken ideas.

That a lot of money was expended on the production is easily seen in its sets and backgrounds. Those scenes of the girl's bigoted home and the squelching of her desire to dance lead one to expect a story of small town intolerance but with the heroine's venture into the bright lights of Broadway the realism of the tale is lost and the proceeding events become superficial.

We would gauge "Dance Magic" as having enough appeal to satisfy the average fan.

The Cast: Ben Lyon, Pauline Starke, Louis John Bartels, Isabel Elson, Harlam E. Knight and Judith Vasseli. Directed by Victor Halperin.

THEME: Girl, who was not allowed to dance in her childhood, becomes a sensation on Broadway. She escapes a scandal when her manager is murdered and is won by rich youth.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Girl's uprearing. Her stage triumph and subsequent entanglement in her manager's web of intrigue. The murder.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Saxophone emblematic of story's spirit. Make use of the dance contest idea.

DRAWING POWER: Okay for average clientele. Author's name should attract.

Produced by Robert Kane. Distributed by First National. Length, 6 reels. Released, June, 1927.

"The Silent Hero," a Rayart feature with a new dog star, serves to introduce H. H. Van Loan as a screen writer.

Still excerpts from the Pathe Western, "White Pebbles."

Adam and Evil

Bright and Interesting—and Well Acted

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A LIKELY idea for farcical play is projected in this picture which features M-G-M's new light comedy team, Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle. It's nothing more or less than a triangle fashioned around a pair of twin brothers (both played by Lew Cody). Inasmuch as one of the boys is married and is getting tired of domesticity the other comes a-visiting and creates a deal of embarrassment before the romance is straightened out satisfactorily.

The piece becomes quite involved, naturally, because of the difficulty in following Cody. The complications are emphasized because the brothers, being twins, are subject to the same impulses. Both are flirtatious and both become involved in love affairs that are established by one or the other. When the visiting brother enters his twin's home—then the married couple discover that they are very much in love with each other.

The farcical flavor keeps it moving with plenty of zest, though the captions drive home too many wisecracks. When a picture is saturated with these nifties for six reels they lose their sting.

Lew Cody plays with a careless abandon that makes the piece thoroughly sophisticated. And his fair partner makes a splendid foil. The intelligent customers should respect to the story.

The Cast: Lew Cody, Aileen Pringle, Gwen Lee, Gertrude Short, Hedda Hopper, Roy D'Arcy. Director, Robert Z. Leonard.

THEME: Farce-comedy of domestic triangle with twin brothers cutting up didoes, before married one settles down and makes up with his wife.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Easy acting by Lew Cody. Flirtatious incident. Tone and quality of sets and atmosphere. Effort of wife to vamp husband. Scenes when husband kids wife into believing he's his brother.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tease title. It will attract attention. Play up comedy angle of twins who kid girls through their resemblance. Mention new comedy team.

DRAWING POWER: For high class houses. Title has a lure about it.

Produced and Distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Length, six reels. Released, August, 1927.

White Pebbles

Only Fair Entertainment in This One

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

AS Westerns go this Wally Wales vehicle arouses but a medicum of interest. The little thread of a story is strengthened with the usual swift riding and heroics, and to vary the thing a trifle, a Chinese cook is introduced as a killer. It is familiar in plot and construction; as its kind has been seen so often before and as it offers nothing particularly new we guess that the fans will regard it as just another Western. Wales in his usual serious self, wending his way through the plottings of the villains and with unperturbed urbanity assisting the charming Olive Hasbrouck.

It was because she needed the help of some strong, silent man that Miss Hasbrouck, mistress of the Bar None Ranch, sent for Wally. The morale of her ranchers was being slowly broken by mysterious killings, the work of "White Pebbles," a considerate fellow who left two pebbles underneath the heads of each of his victims. Wales is in the dark as to the identity of the murderer, and for a long time suspects the foreman; the latter, disliking Wales, has him thrown in jail for the crimes. A friend comes to the rescue, however, and the foreman is foiled.

The Cast: Wally Wales, Olive Hasbrouck, Walter Maly, Tom Bay, Harry Todd, K. Nambu. Director, Richard Thorpe. Story by R. C. Barker.

THEME: Western drama. Through the activities of young Westerner, mysterious killings of ranchmen employed by pretty young ranch owner are stopped when the young man captures the girl's foreman, a rustler, and the girl's Chinese cook explains that he was guilty of the murders.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Wales' appearance as tenderfoot. His escape from jail. Unmasking of foreman's true character and Chinaman's revelation.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Your usual ideas for Westerns come into play here.

DRAWING POWER: Fair.

Produced by Action Pictures, Inc. Distributed by Pathe. Length, 4,485 feet. Released, August 7, 1927.

The Silent Hero

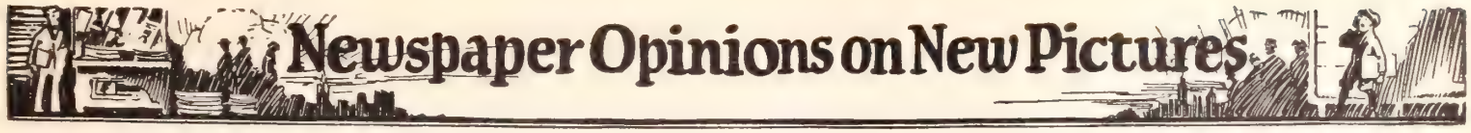
Another Dog Picture

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

THE pen of the well known H. H. Van Loan is credited with this story which the pressbook calls a "screen original." Now, in our estimation either Mr. Van Loan wrote it while dressing for breakfast or the pressbook compilers are off on their usual exaggerated slant, for the yarn has undoubtedly been written in slightly different form dozens of times. However, we have with us Monsieur Napoleon Bonaparte—a German canine—whose name may either serve to help heal the breach between France and Germany, or cause a stir among the dwellers of Valhalla; furthermore, there is quite a capable cast and evidences of good direction in the latter reels. Action in the first part is rather slow.

Bud Taylor, as played by Robert Frazer, is a penniless young man who goes to the far North to seek his fortune so as to ask the hand of Mary Stoddard (Edna Murphy). For a parting gift he presents her with "Phantom," a police puppy which takes an ammediate dislike to Bud's rival—and, of course, "a dog never forgets." In due time Bud strikes gold, and by a remarkable effort Mr. Van Loan manages to transport all the characters to the north country where the villain attempts to jump Bud's claim. But here, Napoleon, kidnapped by villain Ernest Hilliard, comes to the rescue and does everything that police dogs are trained to do, with the result that everything turns out as it should.

The Cast: Robert Frazer, Edna Murphy, Ernest Hilliard, Joseph Girard, Harry Allen, and Napoleon Bonaparte. Directed by Duke Worne.



THEME: Dog melodrama in which dog hero saves day for prospector in far North.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Fast action in latter reels during fight scenes. Sincere work of cast and dog.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: The pressbook suggests a "dog parade", or police pup prize.

DRAWING POWER: For second and third run, and neighborhood trade.

Produced by Duke Worne. Distributed by Rayart. Length, 5,502 feet. No National release date.

Times: "May be nonsensical from the viewpoint of its fractious narrative, but possesses plenty of amusement suitable to sultry days. Not kind of thing that will permit one to sleep in comfortable seats of big theatre. Work of cast highly commendable, especially that of Glenn Tryon, whose antics and expressions found favor with audience."

World: "Mr. Tryon has pleasant appearance, engaging brightness, flair for speed and surefootedness in stunt and gag business, and like Louis John Bartels, so readily remembered for his 'The Show-Off,' this young man seems to have struck precisely type of play which is made to order for him. Tryon is a young man who has freshness and style and method quite extraordinary."

William Craft, director, has extracted every last faint smile from material provided by Harry Hoyt. By all means, give us more of Glenn Tryon in light, fast-moving farces like this one. They entertain and they should be box-office bonanzas. Is a prism of hilarity."

"Painting the Town"—Universal, Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee

Leader: "If you think you would enjoy one of funniest fastest moving pictures of month, we suggest you visit Alhambra this week. . . . Humorous incidents, ludicrous happenings and mishappenings, and fast moving plot which is nicely shaded into the background, form what we term one of funniest and most amusing pictures of season."

"Painting the Town"—Universal, Washington, D. C.

Times: "Turns loose natural comedian. Here's a kid who has everything; screens like a million; has no camera consciousness; injects dancing, vivid self into old situations and certainly has bright future between his fingers."

News: "Mainspring and just about all rest of production was left to that charming comedian Glenn Tryon. Whole thing series of laughs. Apparently scenario writer stayed awake many winter nights to think up such funny gags."

Herald: "Inordinately amusing picture. Patsy Ruth Miller and Glen Tryon proved themselves excellent team of comedians. Mr. Tryon emits wise-cracks enough to keep audience laughing plentifully. 'Painting the Town' is the thing. You'll love every foot of it."

"The Blood Ship" — Coupmbia Pictures, Orpheum Theatre, Chicago

American: "Not since 'The Sea Beast' has there been a picture of men and boats that has equalled 'The Blood Ship.' Strangely compelling theme holds one's attention in a vise. Enthralling sea tale, with fine acting and remarkably good photography. Liked it immensely."

Herald: "Thrilling hokum competently put together by George Seitz."

Daily Journal: "Manly melodrama . . . exciting . . . Bosworth, still Hollywood's best seaman, immense. Admirable performances by cast."

Not only is story basically good but it has been gagged up to high nines with mirth-provoking combination of sure-fire touches and original twists. . . Colleen exceeds any characterization she has yet contributed in whimsicality, elfin sprightliness, charm and true comic sense. A knockout."

Journal : "In 'Naughty But Nice' Colleen Moore proves why she is First National's biggest box-office bet. Colleen amusing and cute."

"Lonesome Ladies"—First National, Mark Strand Theatre, New York City

Herald Tribune: "Ws were surprised and delighted. Picture subtle and soothing where it might have been blatant and boring. Titles clever and in such good taste that we viewed them with delight. . . . We doubt whether Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson ever have been as good. Stone especially was delightful."

New York & New Jersey

THE premiere of Walter Reade's Mayfair Theatre, Asbury Park, N. J., last week was undoubtedly one of the most brilliant theatre openings held in the state of New Jersey. Society to the tune of $5 admission flocked to the new house in Rolls-Royce and other expensive motor cars and full dress and diamonds were much in evidence. Proceeds of the opening night performance were turned over to the Monmouth County Charity Association by Mr. Reade.

A special train was chartered by the several guests who attended the first showing from this section. Among those who are reported as being there were: Sidney Kent, of Paramount-Famous-Lasky; George Schaeffer, Eastern district manager for P-F-L; David Picker; Henry and Charles Blumenthal, of the Haring and Blumenthal circuit; George Dillon, of U D C, and Eddie Carroll, of Pathe. Mayor Hedrick was the chief speaker of the evening.

Reade's Mayfair is somewhat more than a mere motion picture theatre; it appears to be more of an Asbury institution, according to reports. A tower rises from the corner of the site, which can be seen from a long distance. In this are chimes that ring out the four portions of the hour. There is also a balcony overlooking the front part of the building where an extra orchestra plays to the entertainment of the people in the street, and for those inside who wish to dance. Stockton Leigh will manage the Mayfair.

I. J. McGinley, local manager for Paramount, is returning this week from a sales trip into Montana.

Louis Marcus, George E. Carpenter and Carl E. Porter are extremely busy preparing for the opening of the new theatre, formerly the Orpheum, which the Louis Marcus Enterprises recently purchased. This will be one of the best theatres in the west, it is stated, and progression on the installation of improvements and the rebuilding is keeping up with expectations, according to Porter.

Ed C. Mix, Warner Bros. sales representative, who was seriously injured to the extent of having four ribs broken and having been lacerated and bruised when a train hit the car in which he was driving in Idaho, is recuperating nicely, and was able to visit the office here for a few minutes recently.

A. F. Hickox, in charge of the extended run department for Warner Brothers, is in this city and will make the Pocatello section of Idaho with local manager Dave Farquhar before leaving here for Los Angeles.

Herman Wobber, new District Manager who is taking the place of Louis Marcus here for Paramount, and John D. Clark, Western Division Sales Manager, will be in Salt Lake within a day or two and will hold a meeting of the salesmen.

Carl Porter, manager of the Victory Theatre here, states that business at the Paramount houses in Provo and Ogden, Utah, is very good, to the gratification of Managers Ray Hendry and Harry Ashton, respectively.

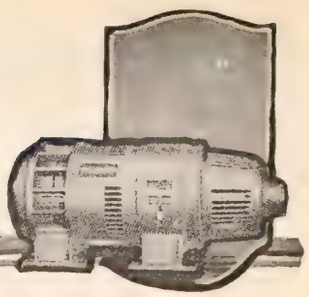
Louis Marcus states that it is the intention to bring Manager Ray Hendry back to Salt Lake and to have Harry Ashton take charge of the Ogden house. Just what capacity Hendry will occupy will be announced soon as well as other changes and appointments to be made.

It is announced that John Gillette of Tooelle, Utah, has just purchased the Bluebird Theatre, of Garfield, which house has been recently under the management of Fred Young. The opening will take place August 7th, according to report.

Fred Young has now made connections in the exchange end of the business and will act in the capacity of manager for the new De Luxe office, which Mr. Drucker and Fred Brown are opening up in this city. The location of this new office is on East First South Street, just east of the new Film Row, and is in conjunction with the Preferred Pictures exchange, managed and owned by George Mayne here.

San Diego

MAJ. T. C. MACAULAY has had plans drawn for a two-story motion picture theatre building in National City, to cost about $40,000. It will be of masonry construction, with an auditorium seating 760. The exterior will be of pressed brick and stucco.



The Ramont Theatre, at Thirtieth and University, one of the best of the outlying community film houses, has been sold by E. C. Wills, who built it and has since operated it, to Mrs. Verdi T. Searles. The new owner of the property has leased it to Mr. Fills under a ten-year contract, and he will continue to operate it.

Announcement has been made that the West Coast Theatres, Inc., are planning a new $250,000 theatre and airdome in El Centro, Imperial County. Construction work will start in the early fall, and it is hoped that the building will be ready for occupancy in February. Stage equipment will be installed to accommodate vaudeville and road show attractions as well as the regular film programs. The theatre will have seating capacity of 1,400.

Can Flicker be Eliminated?

A PROJECTIONIST in Columbus, Ohio, who does not wish his name to be given, recently setn us the following:

"Dear Sir:

"I am taking the liberty of referring to you a question over which another projectionist and I have been doing a considerable amount of arguing without arriving at anything definite.

"The question is simply this:

"Can flicker, that is, pulsating flicker, be completely eliminated when an alternating current arc is used for projecting motion pictures?

"It is the writer's contention that it cannot be eliminated at all and that the only remedy is to change over to the use of direct current. Now, am I right?

"The other party says that it can be completely eliminated simply by placing new parts in the projector and by a slight adjustment of the shutter (the rotating shutter). The parts he refers to are the intermittent movement and driving gears.

"Is there any truth in what he says or is it purely a matter of light action?"

Never Entirely Disappears

Friend Columbus, we shall answer your question directly by saying that the flicker which results when an A. C. arc is used for motion picture projection can never be entirely done away with.

Replacing worn parts in the projector head with new ones will in no way reduce this flicker since it is purely a combined optical and electrical effect and, hence, is not dependent upon the mechanism of the projector.

It is quite possible, however, that your friend is confusing picture unsteadiness with flicker and in this case the thing he calls "flicker" could quite likely be eliminated by replacing worn parts with new ones.

A dirty intermittent sprocket, undercut teeth on the same sprocket, or even end-play in the sprocket will cause the picture to be unsteady while being projected and thus take on the appearance of flicker.

This, however, is not really flicker, since it is not an illumination effect but rather is caused by poor mechanical action in placing successive picture frames before the aperture.

Consequently, this unsteadiness is visible only while the picture is being projected and on a blank screen. With the arc in operation and the shutter running the effect of such mechanical defects would not be visible at all.

The thing commonly called flicker, therefore, is purely an illumination effect and results, essentially, from periodic interruptions in the light being projected to the screen.

These interruptions may be produced either mechanically, (such as by the rotating shutter), electrically, (such as by the periodic rise and fall of the current flowing through the arc stream), or by a peculiar synchronization which inevitably results when these two are combined as they are in the motion picture projector.

What Causes Flicker

In an alternating current arc, as is well known, the current repeatedly reverses its direction through the lamp with the result that first one electrode, then the other, is positive. As a consequence, a crater is formed on each electrode and for any given amperage the craters so formed are smaller than would be formed on the positive electrode of a D. C. arc of the same amperage. Hence, there are three sources of light with an A. C. arc; two craters and one flame.

Since the flame is always present no matter which electrode is positive, it will have the same frequency as that of the current. That is, 120 cycles (for 60 cycle current.) Both the craters, however, which also fluctuate in brilliancy in synchronism with the current, wil have a frequency of only 60 cycles per second (for 60 cycle current) since half the time they are positive and half the time negative. When they are negative their brilliancy is not as great as when they are positive, which fact gives rise to their lower frequency.

Now, the flicker wave of the arc when combined with the flicker wave imparted to the light beam by the rotating shutter is quite likely, under certain conditions, to become visible at all times, even though the frequency of the separate flicker waves is so high that, each taken alone, neither is visible on the screen.

With an alternating current arc, the best screen illumination is obtained when one of the craters (the top one) is used as the light source.

It is quite true that, even when one of the craters is selected for focusing, the flame also will provide some light to the screen. Under the best conditions, therefore, there will be two distinct screen flickers, one from the flame and one from the crater.

Since the crater has the lowest frequency (60 cycles), however, anything which tends to eliminate this low frequency flicker will also automatically render the other invisible. It is only necessary, therefore, to remove, if possible, the lowest frequency flicker.

Action of Shutter

When the shutter is stationary, (shutter frequency equals zero) the only flicker present will be that from the arc crater which is 60 cycles per second. This flicker wave would be invisible on the screen because it would be too high for the eye to see.

As the shutter starts up and increases in speed, the resultant flicker will be equal to the crater flicker (60 cycles), minus the shutter frequency, so that of the latter were 12 cycles (4 revolutions per second for a 3 blade and 6 R. P. S. for a 2 blade shutter) the resultant flicker would be 60—12= 48 cycles per second.

This would not be the screen flicker, however.

The screen flicker would be either the difference between the two frequencies (48 cycles as above) or it would be the difference between the figure just arrived at (48 cycles) and the shutter frequency, whichever was smallest. In this case, it would be the difference between 60 cycles and 48 cycles or 12 cycles.

Now this flicker would be visible on the screen.

Flicker Cannot be Avoided

When a shutter frequency of 20 cycles per second is reached the difference between the arc flicker and shutter flicker is such that the difference between these figures is a maximum.

As the shutter rotates faster, the screen flicker decreases rapidly so that at a shutter frequency of 25 cycles per second it is 10 cycles. This also is visible.

As the shutter further increases in speed, the flicker on the screen will vary between zero and 20 cycles per second and this brings out the interesting fact that when the crater of an A. C. arc is focused on the aperture, it is practically impossible to entirely avoid screen flicker.

This seems to point out a rather distressing condition since there is only a small range of shutter frequency (35 to 50 cycles) where screen flicker is note likely to prove particularly bad.

Not So Bad

Actually, however, the condition is not so bad as an inspection of the curve would indicate, since during the time that either of the carbons were negative, they would tend to form a luminous tip. This tip, while not as bright as the crater itself, would still help considerably in reducing the flicker range, hence, lowering the vanishing flicker frequency on the screen. The flame, too, would assist in keeping the brightness of the focused crater up to normal, since it would be partly focused along with the crater.

Ten Tips for the Proper Care of Handling of Film

CONSOLIDATED Film Industries has recently started a new service idea which has been most favorably received by exchanges and exhibitors throughout the country. Their experiences in the developing and printing of film convince them that they possess many points of information about the proper care and handling of film that tend to increase its life, maintain its quality and reduce unnecessary delays and losses after it has left their plants.

Accordingly they have prepared a series of "Ten Tips" to serve as helpful suggestions to those who handle film in exchanges and theatre production rooms. These "Tips" are being enclosed with every reel shipped out from Consolidated plants.

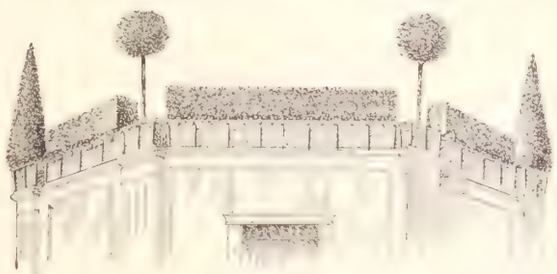
Tip No. 1: (The First Ten Years)—the base of motion picture films is made from cotton. Remember that with reasonable care, it will fulfill the requirements of commercial use but that it has definite physical limitations.

Tip No. 2. (Saving Time and Money)—investigation indicated that a part of the burden of print mutilation begins at the exchanges due to lack of inspection to discover defects which cause damage later. The exchange does start the damage but it often fails to stop it. Inspections are frequently too rapid to be thorough.

Tip No. 3: (Perfect Splicing)—the perfect splice is one that is welded. To make a perfect splice the emulsion must be thoroughly scraped on the ends. Sufficient cement must be applied and the splice allowed to dry under pressure. Remember that film must stand more than ordinary strain in these days of high speed projection.

Tip No. 4: (Rewinding)—Line up the rewind carefully so that the film will feed from one reel to the other without striking the edges of the reels. Do not use defective reels. Avoid "cinching"; that is, attempting to tighten loosely-wound reels. This causes scratches on both sides of the film. "Cupping" the film to detect damaged edges, perforations, or loose splices, is very apt to crack or split the film. Do not "cup" film when rewinding, particularly after it has been projected on machines of high amperage and becomes dry.

Tip No. 5: (Fair and Warmer)—do not store film in a warm, dry place and at an average temperature of over 70 degrees. Under no circumstances store film under high temperatures as this causes the film to dry out and become brittle, subject to shrinkage and susceptible to cracking.



Tip No. 6: (Watch the Leaders)—keep your reels amply protected with leader. Dirty beginnings and ends of reels are frequently seen due to carelessness in this respect.

Tip No. 7: (Standing Room Only)—Tell the exhibitor that Good Projection adds patronage and increased revenue, and that is only possible through the careful handling of prints. Worn and poorly adjusted projectors quickly ruin prints and cause unfavorable comment from patrons.

Tip No. 8: (Watch the Tension Springs and Sprockets)—Tension spring on sprockets should be adjusted evenly and not too tightly. Excessive tension will cause nicked and pulled out perforations. Heavy tension on one side (uneven) can be caused by poorly adjusted, weak or broken springs, and results in an uneven pull-down star on the film. Sprockets are frequently left on projectors until the teeth develop bad hooks and knife-like edges. Film is practically ruined after one or two showings if run on a projector equipped with such sprockets.

Tip No. 9: (How to Ruin a Print at One Showing)—new or green film should not be put on projection machines without being waxed. When unwaxed film is run, it is necessary to clean the shoes frequently, otherwise the accumulation of hardened emulsion on the shoe acts as a holdback, causing a greatly increased pull-down strain which always results in mutilated perforations. A new print can be completely ruined in this manner at one showing.

Tip No. 10: (One Drop of Oil Per Day)—The excessive use of oil due to flooding mechanism of projectors is unnecessary. Aside from the intermittent case, one drop of oil in each oil hole is ample for the average day's run. Oil getting on the film causes dust to adhere, making projection impossible.

L. Marcus Announces Plans for Rebuilt Orpheum

ON his return from Los Angeles last week, Louis Marcus of the Marcus Enterprises throughout the the Intermountain territory announced that in line with the rebuilding of the Orpheum Theatre, Salt Lake City, Fanchon and Marco presentations would be added to the programs of that house.

The remodeling work on the Orpheum under the direction of the new owners is progressing rapidly and the decorating contract has been recently let to the Robert Powers Studios.

According to George E. Carpenter, secretary of the Marcus Enterprises, several new features will be incorporated in the new playhouse. On the lower floor, enlargement of the auditorium will give 8550 square feet of floor space which will permit 1,200 seats. The balcony and loges are said to accommodate the same number.

Space will be arranged over the entrance for a children's nursery, two rest rooms and a lounging room off the main balcony. The general offices of the company will be on the second floor.

National Supply to Market Sentry Safety Control

Culminating several months of negotiations the Sentry Safety Control Corporation has concluded a deal with the National Theatre Supply Company whereby the latter organization will market the Sentry devices throughout the country.

By the terms of this contract the National Theatre Supply Company agrees to take 10,000 machines and will handle all installations and servicing. The Sentry Corporation, while free to negotiate rentals with exhibitors on its own, will devote its future activities to rerating the exhibitor's fire insurance following installation of its devices. It is claimed by officials of the Sentry Corporation that the installation of its fire prevention devices reduces materially the exhibitor's insurance rates and the Sentry Corporation, through its insurance engineers, Lang and Company, undertakes to obtain these reductions for the exhibitor who contracts for their devices.

Negotiations are now progressing for the disposal of the rights for Europe and Australia, which will mean an additional market for nearly 15,000 Sentry controls. Announcement of the successful conclusions of this important contract is expected to be made shortly by the Sentry Safety Corporation.

Lowell, Mass., To Have New 1,000 Seat House

Elmer B. Brown, a contractor of Andover, Mass. and Clayton Kemp, an architect of Lawrence, Mass., are to jointly build a new 1,000 seat theatre in Lowell, Mass., on East Merrimac street seating 1,000. It is understood that the theatre has been leased to a well known circuit.

Inquiries & Comments

The net result of all this is to tend to give the focused crater a constant flicker frequency of 120 cycles per second instead of the 60 cycles it would appear to possess.

It is doubtful as to just how closely the frequency of the focused crater would approach 20 cycles per second. Whether or not it does will not matter since one thing is certain: the luminous tip and arc flame will considerably reduce the flicker effect—so much so in fact, that at low frequencies (15-30 cycles per second) the flicker will not be particularly noticeable.

Nevertheless, it will be present.

Royal Theatre, Findlay, O., To Be First Run

Abe Kraft is spending a successful year's income to redecorate and remodel his New Royal theatre, Findlay. Here are some of the things he is doing to make the Royal the leading first-run downtown house in Lima: He has completely rebuilt the lobby and has inaugurated a new style of entrance architecture which he is keeping more or less under the hat until finished; and he has added six tiers of chairs in the rear of the house, bigfi comfortable loge chairs which are on a raised platform, thus insuring better vision; new lighting fixtures throughout, and new mirrors with French etching in both the lobby and the auditorium entrance; a new mighty Wurlitzer organ; an addition of ten feet to the stage with new stage equipment consisting of automatically controlled curtains, new curtains which are duplicated in both color and fabric over the doors and at the entrance. One of the novelties of the house will be the new Frigidaire drinking fountain, one of the first installed in this territory. It is located in the rear of the theatre and is one of the beauty spots of the theatre. A hard glass canopy is over the fountain which comes up in sprays catching the reflection from hidden lights and creating a wonderful rainbow effect. The Frigidaire equipment is installed up in the projection booth, entirely out of sight. Drinking water at constantly cold temperatures is always on hand. The Royal has been closed for four weeks while these alterations were in progress. It opened August 1st.

Announces New Vitaphone House for Louisville

Plans for a new building covering a full city block and occupied by a new Vitaphone motion picture theatre at Bardstown Road and Eastern Parkway, Louisville, Ky., were announced late last week by George A. Sine, manager of the Strand Theatre, and Fehr Kremer of the Kremer Company. The Fourth Avenue Amusement Company has taken a twenty-five year lease on the property.

Working On Site for New Boston Theatre

The site is being prepared for the new theatre in the Charlestown district of Boston, at Chelsea, Joines and Call streets. Old buildings are being torn down and construction will start at once. The theatre will be 130 by 122 feet. Plans are by Korkyn and Brown of Boston and contract has been let to Benjamin Steinberg of Boston.

Decorating Contract Let at Albuquerque

The decorating contract on the new theatre under construction in Albuquerque, New Mexico, has been let to the Robert E. Power Studios, by the Bachechi Amusement Company. Work will be started on this theatre soon by the decorators, and the house will probably open in September. It will have 1400 seats.

Robert Ray has been added to the directorial staff of Fox Films by General Superintendent Sol M. Wurtzel. He will direct comedies under supervision of George E. Marshall.

A slight change in plans for May McAvoy was announced this week by Warner Bros. who will postpone for a short time the production of "Rebecca O'Brien" which she was to start this week, in order that she may fill the star role in "Roulette." This will be directed by Ralph Graves from his own story.

Olive Borden, Fix Film star, is working under direction of J. G. Blystone at Lake Louise, Canada. "Pajamas," by William Conselman, is the vehicle and Lawrence Gray has the masculine lead.

Because of his work in "Hula," "The World at Her Feet" and "Evening Clothes," Arnold Kent, Italian leading man, at present playing in "Beau Sabreur," has been signed to a new long term contract with Paramount. Immediately after signing the contract Kent departed for Guadalupe, California, where the unit filming "Beau Sabreur," Paramount special, is on location. It was through Adolphe Menjou that Kent got his first chance with Paramount.

Buck Jones, having completed "Chain Lightning" for Fox Films, is preparing for his next Fox vehicle at the West Coast Studio. Diane Ellis is seen opposite Buck in "Chain Lightning," directed by Lambert Hillyer.

With Bob Steele rapidly recovering from injuries received in his last picture, "The Mojave Kid," preparations are now being made at the F B O studios to begin work on his second starring vehicle, to be titled "The Bandit's Son." Young Steele has been confined to his bed for the past three weeks and was only recently taken to his home from the French Hospital. Wallace Fox has been chosen to direct this picture.

Howard Hawks is shooting interior sequences in "Bride of the Night" at Fox Films West Coast Studios. Charles Farrell and Greta Nissen have the leading romantic roles.

After spending nearly two weeks on board a specially chartered ocean liner, filming sea scenes along the Pacific Coast, the Columbia company which is making "Alias the Lone Wolf," returned to Hollywood this wek to complete the picture at the company's studios.

Hank Mann has bee nadded to the cast of "Bride of the Night," a Howard Hawks production for Fox Films in which Charles Farrell and Greta Nissen are featured. Others in the cast are Mae Busch, Vadim Uraneff, Tyler Brooke, Eddie Sturgis, Josephine Borio, Erville Alderson, Dale Fuller, John T. Murray, Constantine Romanoff and John Boles.

Wilfred Noy has been selected by I. E. Chadwick to direct "Eager Lips," a First Division picture starring Pauline Garon and featuring Gardner James, Betty Blythe, Jack Richardson, Fred Warren, Evelyn Selby and Erin La Vissoniere. Adele Buffington did the story and continuity.

Malcolm St. Clair, the Paramount director, signed a new contract yesterday for one year. He is now working on the story "Red Hair," Clara Bow's next starring vehicle. This will be followed by "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." Since closing the Long Island studio St. Clair has been directing Constance Talmadge.

Nicholas Stuart, Fox Films juvenile now completing the featured masculine role in "Mum's the Word" under the direction of Eugene Forde, will soon appear in David Butler's first production for Fox. Sally Phipps will have the leading feminine role.

Jack L. Warner, in charge of production for Warner Bros., announces this week the renewal of William Koenig's contract as studio manager. The new contract covers a long period of years. Mr. Koenig is now assisting Jack Warner in the preparation of the company's forthcoming program.

Jules Furthman, wrtier, has signed a new contract with Paramount for one year. He is now working on the continuity of the well known play, "Abie's Irish Rose," which will be screened by Paramount. His last important story was "The Way of All Flesh" the Paramount production, in which Emil Jannings starred.

Tyler Brooke, of "No, No, Nanette" fame, and regarded as one of the most versatile comedians in the motion picture industry, has been signed to a long-term contract by General Superintendent Sol M. Wurtzel of Fox Films. Brooke will be cast for the leading masculine role in Van Bibber comedies under supervision of George E. Marshall.

Shooting on the cafe scene in Gotham's production of "The Girl From Rio" with Carmel Myers was begun this week at the West Coast Studio. The entire sequence is being made in Technicolor, the first time that this process has been employed in an independent feature production, according to Sam Sax. Tom Terriss, directing, is carrying out the merest details of local color so that the atmosphere may be strictly authentic. The dancing costume which Miss Myers wears in this scene was designed especially for Gotham at a cost of about $2,500.

Betty Bronson is to play the lead opposite Lane Chandler in the Paramount western, "Open Range."

Production is scheduled to start this week on "The Gorilla," which Asher-Small and Rogers are to produce with Alfred Santell at the directorial helm. Charlie Murray and Fred Kelsey are teamed in this mystery farce which First National will release. Raymond Turner has also been engaged for a part.

Olga Printzlau's first assignment under her new contract with Columbia will be an original story, "Say It With Sables."

Casting is now in progress on the Tiffany production, "Once and Forever." Announcement of the leading players will be made shortly.

Jerome Stern has been chosen to direct Ranger, F B O dog star, in "Ranger of the North," which enters productions next week with Lina Basquette and Hugh Trevor in the leading human roles. Leon d'Usseau will supervise.

Tom Crizer has been selected to do the scenario of "Red Hair," which Clara Bow will make upon completing "Hula," her latest for Paramount.

"Home Made," Johnny Hines' new First National Picture, is now facing the battery of cameras and is progressing rapidly through its initial stages. Marjorie Daw will be the leading lady and her selection completes the cast.

Esther Ralston finished her latest starring role in "After Office Hours" late last week at the Paramount Hollywood studio. Eddie Sutherland, who directed, has taken the film to the cutting room.

Frank Tuttle is to direct "The Glory Girl," Esther Ralston's next starring piece which goes nto production right after "After Office Hours" is finished. Luther Reed will direct Florence Vidor's next vehicle, "Honeymoon Hate," based on Alice N. Williamson's novel.

Rex Lease heads the cast of "The Cancelled Debt," the eighteenth and last picture on the Sterling program for 1926-27. Charlotte Stevens appears in the feminine lead. In the support are James Gordon, Florence Turner. Ethel Grey Terry and Billy Sullivan.

Myrna Loy and Audrey Ferris have been cast for roles in "The Jazz Singer," which Alan Crosland is directing for Warner Bros.

Hampton Del Ruth has been assigned to do the direction of Gotham's "Blondes By Choice," which will be started within a few weeks. This comedy was adapted from an original by Josephine Quirk. It is likely that Claire Windsor will have the leading role.

Ralph Graves is busy selecting the supporting cast for "Roulette," the temporary title of his story for which he is now casting. May McAvoy and Hedda Hopper have been signed for parts of importance.

Columbia Pictures has signed Louis Gesnier to direct several of the future Columbia productions. His first work will be "Say It With Sables," which will star Claire Windsor.

Give Them the Best

Theatre patrons are entitled to the best screen quality—which means Eastman quality.

Give them the best. Most productions are made on Eastman Negative. Specify prints on Eastman Positive and you get the film combination that first made movies practicable—that has maintained its superiority from the beginning of the industry.

—they agree that in Shorts too, M-G-M is the Top of the Industry

AT A PREVIEW IN THE EMBASSY THEATRE, N. Y., THE INDUSTRY'S LEADING WRITERS ACCLAIMED M-G-M JUNIOR FEATURES

KANN in Film Daily:

"M-G-M has no worry in short subjects. The company need not take a back seat for any competitors. Taken by and large, the special program of short subjects flashed on the Embassy screen yesterday demonstrated that.

"The trade well knows the abilities of Hal Roach in the comedy field. And so when you learn that Our Gang appears in the M-G-M lineup there isn't very much more to be said. The first is 'Yale vs. Harvard' and it is there. The well-deserved popularity of this series is again demonstrated by this subject."

SEWELL in M. P. World:

"The showing suggests that M-G-M is in line for the short subjects war and right in the front line. The various items will be more definitely treated in a later issue."

JOHNSTON in M. P. News:

"Altogether, fine dramatic short subjects."

CRUIKSHANK in Telegraph:

The preview of the first short subjects to be released by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer indicates that the short product emanating from the Lion's lair may be expected to maintain a high standard of excellence.

"AN AFRICAN ADVENTURE"—Here is a gem.

"THE STING OF STINGS"—One of the best of the Hal Roach produced Charley Chase comedies, two reels in length and bordering on an "Our Gang" in merit.

"SOARING WINGS"—Another UFA one-reeler which is one of the most beautiful and fascinating pictures ever created.

"THE FLAG"—It is a thoroughly high class production, a "prestige picture," with plenty of real acting. This is another one to bill equally with your feature, or an ideal feature itself on an all-shorts bill.

"YALE VS. HARVARD"—One of the good old "Our Gang" comedies with Farina, Fatty and others of the "old-timers" is augmented by a lot of new kids, two of whom are especially good. It is a high class short, as are all of these series. It is more lavishly produced than the majority of its forerunners and ranks as a wow.

HANK LINET in Exhibitors Daily:

"The showing demonstrated very clearly that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer mean to handle their shorts with the same attention to detail of production which has always been evident in their feature length product."

Inside Slants on the Industry

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

THE premiere season is under way. "Wings" opened first, closely followed by "The Patent Leather Kid." Two war pictures, but each of marked individuality and excellence.

"Wings" glorifies the airplane's part in war and carries a strong if incidental message for peace. For the public, it is, and will be, a grand show. The airplane stuff overshadows everything else, dwarfs the love story, shoves it into the background, but who cares?

"Wings" is one of the screen's biggest novelties. It is superb in its realism. Trick stuff and real stuff are dovetailed in such a way that only those in the secret know where one ends and the other begins.

For the first time, in a sustained dramatic picture the camera rides the clouds, and the audience rides with it. This is a brand new sensation for picture-goers.

THERE have been near-roadshows aplenty in the past season or two. Some pictures have come along with a big ballyhoo and died on Broadway—and Main Street—because they were not roadshow calibre, though they turned out in some cases to be pretty good specials.

In order to be a roadshow a picture must have several things, but most important of all it must appeal to the circus instinct. If it hasn't the spectacular stuff that can be circused, it isn't a roadshow.

We hazard the guess that "Wings" will fly right into the roadshow class easily.

THERE is war on Broadway. This is a statement that may be taken two ways. One is that "The Patent Leather Kid" opening last Monday night at the Globe theatre is a competitive World War film with the other three, the immortal "Big Parade," "What Price Glory" and "Wings."

Just how much war stuff even Broadway can digest all in one dose is a question, but it is this writer's opinion that "The Patent Leather Kid" is not outclassed by its illustrious predecessors, at least when it gets out of the big cities.

Judged without comparisons with any of the war pictures—a pretty difficult thing to do for any one who has seen one or more of them—this picture has plenty of merit, notwithstanding some faults.

THE merit lies in a well developed although conventional story, many individual sequences that hit the high spots in drama, a mighty colorful prize fight, some good war stuff that doesn't sidetrack the players and a splendid finish as to idea but which misses a bit on execution.

The faults as we see them lie in the first half of the picture, where the film comes dangerously near becoming a vaudeville act to the detriment of the story development, and to too much space being devoted to incidents in which Mr. Barthelmess has no active part. After all, this is Mr. Barthelmess' picture as film fans will view it, and they will sit in the theatre impatient for the time when the "Kid" gets into that "wonderful war." There are numberless scenes, each carrying a certain amount of comedy interest in themselves, especially on Broadway, that can be eliminated without doing any harm to the film, excepting shortening it, which will have to be done when the production goes to the picture theatres.

One thing is certain about "The Patent Leather Kid." It brings Mr. Barthelmess back in a story that is really worthwhile, and gives him some badly-needed acting opportunities. It is also safe to say that it is his best vehicle since "Tol'able David," which is as it should be. The star's acting is faultless, and he is ably assisted by Molly O'Day, an unknown, who has one big scene that would have tested the ability of our greatest emotional stars. That she made the grade is all the more credit to her, but it may not mean much at the box office.

REDUCED to a few words, "The Patent Leather Kid" just missed being in the "roadshow" class, but is plenty big enough to stand them up in the picture houses. Its war stuff is, of course, going to suffer comparisons, but we are inclined to think that the picture doesn't depend on its war atmosphere for its appeal.

It's a mighty good picture that will make money—and that's what most exhibitors are looking for these days.

ONE of the best known writers in America has been engaged by a leading picture executive to write the latter's life story. The author will receive $20,000 for the job.

The executive's life offers plenty of material for the writing of a business romance. And the writer's name on the story will have a lot to do with making it standard stuff for magazine purposes or book publication.

ANOTHER leading executive has also hired another leading writer to tell about his life in words. For how much, deponent sayeth not. But the writer has been traveling around with the executive for over a year gathering material first-hand from the subject of the biography.

Leading writers who are unable to "crash" the scenario game might find the writing of biographies of executives a pleasant and profitable substitute, not requiring such an intimate knowledge of picture politics as the script business calls for.

FINDING remedies for evils is constructive work. It is often necessary first, however, to discover the evils, point out their causes, and give them a thorough airing.

One of the big evils at the moment is that there is entirely too much financial exploitation of this industry by a few for their own ends.

This is a practical world. Nobody of any sense expects a business man to work for nothing or to spend his whole time in philanthropies. But it is also true that the motion picture has been subjected to entirely too much financial jockeying.

GOOD pictures don't just happen. There are no magicians in this industry, though some people seem to think they are gifted with wizardry. Good pictures come from consistent, able, original effort. And they come also from close attention to business.

The stock ticker seems to be replacing the motion picture as the main interest of some film folk.

What folly this is! As if the stock ticker could be made to yield any real results in picture-making, distribution and exhibition! Playing the stock-market, to the exclusion of hard work on this industry's real problems, won't do the film world any good.

HERE'S a curious thing: the producer, being also an exhibitor, is passing on to himself the intolerable burden of foolish, extravagant, nonsensical production costs.

The producers do not own or operate all the theatres, of course. But they control a considerable number. Whether they are passing this burden to themselves as exhibitors, or shoving it along to independent theatre owners, the result is just the same.

Now, the result too often is poor pictures which won't stand up by themselves. What happens? Elaborate presentations costing huge sums, and band acts which run theatre overhead sky-high.

What does it all mean? Trying to cure one form of waste by spending a lot of money in another direction?

IT is understood from semi-official sources that all negotiations between the Saxe circuit of Wisconsin and the Finkelstein and Ruben interests of Minnesota and the Dakotas are completely off—at least for the time being.

The Saxe people rejected the proposition outlined by F. & R. largely, it is believed, because of the Federal Trade Commission ruling in its case against Paramount. The decision of the Commission, which would indicate that there will be a retarding of theatre building and acquisition on the part of distributor-exhibitors, is said to have relieved the Saxe circuit of its fear of expansion of Universal in the exhibiting field. F. & R. has of course, felt some concern also over the leasing of the new $2,000,000 theater in Minneapolis by Publix.

THE consolidation of four major city newspapers, and the entrance of William Randolph Hearst into the Pittsburgh (Pa.) newspaper field, has stirred Pittsburgh exhibitors as no other development has in years. The saving of thousands of dollars yearly in advertising rates, and the closer co-operation of publishers and exhibitors, are foreseen as two of the most important motion-picture factors of the consolidation.

Governed by an iron-clad Publishers' Association, which severely limited the prerogatives of each individual paper, the field has, in the opinion of many, knuckled under to five daily and three Sunday newspapers for years. The substitution of two dailies and one Sunday paper for the former Post-Sun and Gazette-Telegraph, giving the city a total of three dailies and two Sunday papers, is thus viewed with relief by exhibitors.

While advertising rates are now uniform, the exhibitor will secure full coverage in three papers, whereas he previously was forced to use five.

Many of the larger exhibitors foresee the development of a keen rivalry between the three existing papers in the motion-picture sections—due to Mr. Hearst's acknowledged leaning toward the motion picture as a matter of news interest. It is felt that the Sun-Telegraph (Mr. Hearst's organ), will force the other publications to the use of additional space on motion pictures—a conjecture which appears ready of fulfilment by the immediate establishment of a movie-section on the part of the Hearst paper.

And, while no definite steps have been taken in this connection, many exhibitors are anticipating a radical change in this policy—and the establishment of regular metropolitan screen reviews.

AN interesting effort to eliminate "bunk" and the "high hat" from production, somewhat along the line we have been advocating editorially, is being made by a young producer just commencing activity in the East. Picture making is not treated in this organization as a divine, esoteric mystery, but simply as a matter of hard work and common sense.

Practically every man on the staff has at one time or another found disfavor in a large organization because he refused to be a yes-man—and these men have been given to understand very distinctly that their continuance with this company rests with their refusal to "yes" anybody. Every man in the unit is free to criticize or praise anything he likes—so long as he can give a reason for his view. There are no "star chamber" sessions and secret conferences; no criticism behind anyone's back, because it can be made to the victim's face without fear of dismissal. There are no private offices, even, and titles mean nothing.

This frankness extends to all departments. If an actor is unsuited to the part he seeks, he is told so tactfully at once, instead of having his hopes falsely raised by being told to "come back in two weeks." Any man in the organization can be seen at any time by anyone with a legitimate reason.

The policy has already worked wonders in promoting co-operation and team-play among staff and crew during advance preparations, and has saved thousands of dollars during the preliminary stages. How much further it will go during production remains to be seen. Perhaps it seems strange that we should regard as revolutionary something so simple and sensible. It is a sad commentary on film politics and intrigue that it should be so, but to anyone familiar with studio tactics in general the substitution of sense for incense and frank criticism for fulsome flattery is nothing short of epoch making.

ALTHOUGH there were many predictions at the time of the exodus to California that New York was through as a production centre, the facts now point the other way. Harold Lloyd arrives this week with his complete staff and unit to work for two months. Henry King will be here shortly to make three productions. Pathe is making a serial at Cosmopolitan, and North American starts there next week on a color series. Robert Kane will resume work about the middle of next month. Fairly well grounded rumor has it that Meighan and Dix will be back in New York this winter. Allan Dwan will probably resume before long. Numerous independent productions are under way or contemplated. All of which does not sound as though New York's production days were exactly over.

SOME interesting points concerning our South American film trade are raised by R. O. Hernandez, a Colombia, S. A., editor with several newspaper and magazine connections, now on a visit to New York. He makes particular objections to the Spanish titles placed in prints for the Latin-American trade. These, he says, are largely written by men born in Spain who, as a result, used many words which are ambiguous, incomprehensible or even obscene in Latin-America, due to the difference in Spanish as spoken in Spain and to the south of us. This, he points out, is like employing titles written in the British idiom in America without change. The solution, he feels, would be to have these titles written by well-educated Mexican or Colombian newspaper men, who could write titles understandable in any Spanish-speaking country.

¶ Can you beat it? This "Chang" picture has gone and done it again! Smacked to smithereens the eleven-year record of the California Theatre, San Francisco! Turned the reviewers into raving press agents. Coming on top of that record-breaking 9 weeks' run at the Rivoli, New York, where 301,000 people saw "Chang"; and S. R. O. engagements at the Fenway, Boston; Roosevelt, Chicago; Adams, Detroit; Million Dollar, Los Angeles; Lyceum, Detroit; and others t. n. t. m. ¶ "Chang". Hailed on the editorial pages of the New York World, Duluth Herald and other newspapers as the mightiest leap forward the picture industry has taken in years. Featured in the Literary Digest, New Republic, Nation, McCall's and other conservative national magazines as an event of world-wide importance. ¶ Merian Cooper and Ernest Schoedsack, who risked their lives for 18 months in the jungles of Siam to bring back "Chang", should be very proud. Paramount is very happy. Not only for the sensational success of "Chang", but for the new startling motion picture history being written daily by "Way of All Flesh" (352,422 spectators in first seven weeks, including 9,158 repeaters, Rialto, N. Y. Fourth week at the St. Francis, San Francisco, even bigger than the first). "Metropolis", "Beau Geste", "Barbed Wire", "Firemen, Save My Child" and others of Paramount's 100% program. ¶ The new era in motion pictures. "Different", daring, teeming with the life and color of this breathless age. And how this smart modern public is responding! The talk of a nation! ¶ Can Paramount keep it up? We'll tell the world. We diagnosed public demand for something new. We prepared. We're delivering. 75 more to come in 1927-8. Have you got them? If so, you're sitting pretty. If not, hurry! black or flaming orange?

¶ Remember when all fountain pens were black? Then a business genius, with a showman's alertness, brought out flaming orange fountain pens. Sensing the rising demand of a new world for beauty, color, life. Orange pens sold like wild fire. Then green pens, yellow pens, pastel pinks and baby blues. Boom times for the pen business. ¶ One big fountain pen manufacturer held off. Stubbornly sticking to his black pens. Saying he had always made money with them and always would. Scoffed at colored pens as a fad that would pass quickly. What happened? His business stood still, then dropped dangerously. ¶ This one-time leader woke up. Realized colored pens were not a fad, but a sign of these changing times. Symbol of the desire for the new, the different and unusual. He had to satisfy his public or quit. He blossomed forth with pens in all colors of the rainbow. His business came back in leaps and bounds. But what previous losses he had to overcome! Penalty for his delay. ¶ The moral is plain, gentlemen. The 1927 public's demand for the daring, the different, is broad, world-wide. It extends to all lines. To entertainment, to motion pictures. ¶ Paramount is the one company that has sensed this. Paramount is making pictures for this new world, "Beau Geste", "Chang", "Way of All Flesh", "Barbed Wire", "Underworld", Clara Bow. Right through the new 100% Program. Exhibitors — don't make the mistake of the man who scoffed at colored fountain pens. Don't blind yourself to your public's demand. You can't buck the tide of the times. Tomorrow your opposition may wake up. Line up today with the thousands of smart showmen playing Paramount's 100% Program. Pictures of a new world!

Budgets

Advertising Is Competitive In Every Field But This

By William A. Johnston

THE top executive of one of the large picture companies told me last week that he agreed with our arguments in behalf of selling pictures through service to the exhibitor.

"Why don't you do it?" I asked—"or rather, why don't you do it better than you do?"

"For two reasons," he replied.

"First, I am not, as yet, clear as to just how service can best be given.

"And secondly"—here, to his credit, he grinned—"there's the budget!"

* * * *

HE might better have said: "There's the budget. And you can forget the other reasons."

If budgets won't permit of service selling, there won't be any. But if service selling is correct then it would seem as if the budgets that permit it are open to criticism and correction.

* * * *

JUST what determines a budget in the picture business?

Take the production budget, to start with.

This budget seems to be a remarkably large and loose one. Back of it is as strenuous and often hysterical competition as the business world has ever seen. It is marveled over. Star and story and other production materials are fought for and paid for in a wild, prodigal and jealous scramble. Performers from the stage, writers from the book, magazine and newspaper world walk into the movies at salaries at least ten times their former wage. Executives and directors get yearly stipends unparalleled in the business world. Single picture costs mount easily into the millions. Costly mistakes are calmly buried; the total cost of Hollywood's scrapped negative would make a yearly scandal. In fine, the production budget eye is strained only toward results; it looks right and away over the cost sheet.

* * * *

Then there's the distribution budget.

I believe it can very safely be said that the sales machines in this trade are the costliest in the business world. As compared with production, the workers in the distribution branch are vastly underpaid. Nor do the salesmen earn more than salesmen in other businesses; probably they are paid less; and they work harder. It is the tremendous effort to sell—or, rather, to outsell—the other company that makes the machines so costly. There are towns and towns in the land that, week by week, yield less film revenue than the cost of the salesmen who visit them.

In other words—competition. That is, the urge back of distribution. Just as with production, it is the result that counts most. The aim is to outsell the other fellow. The means are worth the end, whatever the cost.

* * * *

AND now we come to another budget. The advertising budget.

Advertising is the 50-50 worker with the salesman! You cannot sell goods with advertising and without salesmen; and you cannot sell with salesmen and without advertising.

Is advertising a major factor in this field?

I'll say it is!

If the force that moves two hundred million dollars' worth of goods from Hollywood on through the box-office and turns them into five hundred million dollars in cash isn't a major factor in this business, then what is?

An Editorial by William A. Johnston

If any producer doesn't believe this to be a fact then let him tell the exhibitor to quit spending ten million dollars a year in advertising pictures to the public.

But—if he agrees that the exhibitor should spend this large sum—the greatest, per gross of business done, in all the retail world,—then let the producer put into the exhibitor's hands all the necessary information, all the right information, so that the exhibitor can make this advertising pay its best possible dividends.

How, in the name of common sense, can the exhibitor tell the people why they should come to see the picture if the producer doesn't tell the exhibitor why and how he made them?

It is my contention—and that contention is acknowledged in every other business but this—that the trade paper is the medium for this information.

But if it isn't—if another is better—then use that other way.

But use something. And do the job as it should be done, as it is done in other and less remarkable businesses than this.

Ah! But there's a budget.

"You're right, my dear fellow, but the budget won't permit this service."

Then—may I ask—who and what determined the budget? Why and what is its size?

* * * *

WE have seen—in fact, everyone knows—that competition, hectic competition, fixes the budgets of production and distribution, and the budgets are huge.

Evidently the leaders of this business don't regard advertising as competitive.

I was always under the impression that all advertising effort was highly competitive. That is a general impression.

A book has just been published, the life story of a man who earned, in all, five million dollars for planning and writing advertising campaigns for some of the nation's business. It sounds like one of our production salaries. Evidently, in other large industries, they think quite as much of the advertising as of the goods they make; they pay quite as much for creative brains in each field.

I would suggest that one of our business leaders write an article for an advertising magazine on why advertising is not competitive in the picture business. It would be eagerly received, and curiously read.

Production budgets.

Distribution budgets.

Advertising budgets.

Just why do they differ so completely?

You do not find the producers meeting in concord and discussing their plans and expenditures for plays, stories, players, directors, etc.

You do not find the distributors holding a joint convention in an effort to standardize all selling effort.

Yet you do have the spectacle of executives meeting in all seriousness and agreeing to standardize, with definite rules and agreements. their advertising effort.

And I should say that this meeting is without any parallel in the entire business world of today.

* * * *

A PHILOSOPHICAL friend of mine says that the most common and serious error of the human race is an inability to recognize and freely admit mistakes.

A serious error has been made with advertising budgets in this field.

I think it is largely the fault of the trade papers. They have not builded as they should have.

But if the fault lies also with the companies let it be frankly admitted and corrected.

The issue, gentlemen, is not a trade paper one. It is an issue with your customers, the exhibitors, and, through them, a still greater issue with the American public.

It is, in fact, the basis of the public relations of the Motion Picture industry.

Statement of a Real Problem About Which Something Has Got to Be Done---A Practical Matter of Dollars and Cents to Exhibitors and Producers

By WARREN NOLAN

(Copyright, 1927, by Motion Picture News, Inc. Republication rights granted provided credit is given the author and Motion Picture News)

(For four years Warren Nolan was a member of the staff of "The New York Times". For two years he was employed on the late Mr. Frank Munsey's New York "Telegram-Mail", part of that time as motion picture editor and critic. He was educated at St. Viateur College and Georgetown University.—Ed.)

IT was this generation's foremost dramatic critic, Mr. George Bernard Shaw, who epitomized in the first volume of his "Dramatic Opinions and Essays" the crux of the present problem of newspaper motion picture criticism, a practical matter of dollars and cents to exhibitors and producers in the film business. G. B. S., referring as ever to his favorite protagonist, wrote:

"When I criticized I really did know what I wanted. Very few journalistic critics do."

No Standard Yet

Here in America, the drama is criticized by others who know: admittedly competent judges like Gilbert W. Gabriel of The Sun, George Jean Nathan of The American Mercury and half a dozen other publications; Alexander Woollcott of The World, and Percy Hammond of The Herald-Tribune. In the footsteps of the late James Gibbons Huneker there have come forward such music critics as Pitts Sanborn. W. J. Henderson. Deems Taylor, Olin Downes and Lawrence Gilman. Art has Thomas Craven and Forbes Watson. Literature is criticized by H. L. Mencken, Carl Van Doren, William McFee, Louis Bromfield, Harry Hansen and Sherwood Anderson. Until recently those ranks included Stuart Sherman of the University of Illinois and the Herald-Tribune's "Books," and Amy Lowell of New England and stubby black cigars.

Listen. What have the movies?

Wait a minute!

What single effort has been made in the past fifteen years to erect any structure of sound, fair motion picture criticism, and to attract to that work clear-thinking, cultured literary men who are on a mental level with those occupied in criticising other art forms? It is axiomatic that the cinema is a more universally appealing art form or entertainment medium than any the history of mankind records. It is also conceded by all hands that the clientele of the cinema is identical with that of large-circulation dailies: the same mob. Then, too, movies now are news and newspapers have so generally accepted that fact that their reporters go forth and collect information about Gloria's unbobbed bob, Charlie's opinion of Rodin and Pavlowa, and the rims of Harold's glasses.

Still there is no motion picture criticism, journalistic or otherwise; no standard agreed upon by any two reviewers; no theory of criticism sponsored by any newspaper but The New York Times. And that theory eliminates analytical criticism in favor of reporting. There is not even any indication that a foundation has been laid for a critical structure.

Managing editors, publishers, critics, motion picture men with brick and mortar that is concerned—nobody seems to give a damn. A situation that should not be tolerated is endured on all hands, surreptitious curse-words occasionally relieving picture men of their sentiments.

In New York City motion picture critics have been made from dried-up editorial writers, wistful young ladies fresh from reams of advice given to the lovelorn, sports writers, ex-actresses, police court reporters, sons of English noblemen, and eighteen-year old cub reporters. It is not so bad in London or in the hinterland of America, unless one lists cities in which advertising managers control motion picture news pages.

No inquiry is made into backgrounds of applicants for motion picture critic posts, nor into their aptitude for the particular work, their knowledge of the English language or their possession of the critical faculty. Himself, a managing editor rarely sees a film—only when his wife's second cousin must be entertained during the post-harvest season—and his selection of a critic directly reflects his own low estimate of pictures. He never reads his critic after engaging him and usually fires him when he dares to ask for a raise in salary. As a result, movie critics as a class have little standing on newspapers. Sometimes they are highly intelligent people, but it does not matter. Even Jim Tully is entitled to abuse them.

Why? What's the matter?

I.
Managing Editors' Fault

With the endorsement of Mr. William A. Johnston of the Motion Picture News, the present writer simply states the problem. At this time no bullet-proof solution can be offered, no all-encompassing conclusion drawn from the stated premises; only a personal opinion as to remedies may be expressed. This erstwhile critic is sufficiently engrossed in the subject to want to Start Something—to awaken publishers and editors of newspapers, executives of film companies and (possibly) critics themselves from the obviously unanimous lethargy on this subject, and thus to inspire some constructive thought on the part of responsible parties who are in a position to know the facts.

Something Ought To Be Done. The author is just he whom F. P. A. has named The Attention-Caller.

Managing editors' choices of motion picture critics have been carelessly made in a majority of cases. Had proper men been engaged in the first place they themselves would have decided upon some canons of cinema criticism by now; and through subsequent education and guidance of the public, keen appreciation of fine pictures by audiences would have been hastened.

The film critic's salary is low; and the job never has had an attractive air of respect thrown around it in newspaper offices. The average weekly pay of a New York movie critic is $65; only three men and one woman receive $100 or more, and they have been at their posts for from three to six years each. The critic of one evening paper took her job for no salary at all because she wanted to be in the company of great movie stars, her predecessor says. There are, of course, such critics as John S. Cohen, Jr., of The Sun, whose reputation is not due to the fact that his father is publisher of The Atlanta Journal; and Roscoe McGowen, former critic of the New York Daily News; and Richard Watts, Jr., of The Herald-Tribune, all of whom sought their critical jobs because they actually liked motion pictures.

The N. Y. Critics

Cohen was a reporter on The Sun and for a year wrote movie criticisms for no remuneration and under the anonymity of "The Moviegoer," seeing new pictures Saturdays and Sundays and on Mondays returning to his regular reportorial duties. McGowen, a mild-mannered man forty-two years old, was writing editorials on The Daily News at an excellent newspaper salary. When he switched to movie criticisms he approached his new job in the correct spirit: modestly and frankly admitted he knew little of picture-making and hence asked many questions about production and distribution. He tried to be thoroughly grounded in pictures. McGowen was one critic who kept close to his readers' average intelligence—rock bottom—without patently "writing down" to them. He took his audience for a guide. Watts likes movie criticism so much that he has refused three offers from one determined independent producer and another from Mr. Walter Wanger of Famous Players, for more than double the salary he is paid on the Herald-Tribune, to remain in criticism. Cohen, also, declined handsome propositions from Mr. Paul Bern of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Mr. Walter Wanger of Famous-Players last year. The three instances are cited to show that it is possible to attract and retain people who like movies and who take a pride in their jobs.

God Bless the Movie Critics! Continued

Presently a New York dramatic critic would be highly indignant if offered a job as film reviewer. Yet the opportunity afforded a critic of motion pictures made by such men as Chaplin, Von Stroheim, Lubitsch, Murnau, Lang, Cruze, Vidor, Brenon and a dozen other intelligent directors is far wider than that to be had in appraising the latest Shubert girl show or the current opus of Mr. Samuel Shipman or the prolific Mr. Owen Davis. Bad as are many pictures in Broadway first run theatres, the average film offered in Times Square is on a higher artistic and entertainment level than the average "legitimate" offering of the past three seasons. "Broadway," the stage success, was matched in construction, technique, characterization, staging and effect by the films, "The Big Parade," "Resurrection" and "Stark Love," to name the first three that come to mind. (Of course young Mr. Jed Harris will deny this.)

"A Woman of Paris," Chaplin's serious film, is comparable as a creative effort to any Eugene O'Neill play, while Jannings' "A Last Laugh" is a short story as perfect as any from the pen of Theodore Dreiser or Sherwood Anderson.

"High-Brow" Bunk

After all, the high-browed pose assumed by aspiring intelligentsia (including most critics) of avowedly scorning the cinema, is just about all wet. Intelligently made movies need no appologia written for them. I have sat with the ponderous Dreiser in a projection room and listened to him rave about the art of Chaplin for two hours. Jed Harris, producer of "Broadway," thought so much of "A Woman of Paris" that he wrote Chaplin a letter and offered to work for him free of charge—only to become self-conscious at the last moment and put the letter in his trunk, where it still reposes. The fire-eating H. L. Mencken recently went to Hollywood to arm himself with material for a fresh barrage on movies; he met some intelligent people and returned, a convert to films. When Valentino was being buried last August I had a strange telephone call: Mencken wanted a ticket! With men like these attracted to films—why not a higher type of newspaper critic?

The average movie critic sticks to his $50 or $75 a week job because he has his by-line (for attainment of which some newspapermen struggle for years) and the right to say what he thinks about Charlie Chaplin, Ernst Lubitsch and Eric Von Stroheim, who chuckle at his opinions if ever they read them. Further, a critic may bawl out press agents making thrice his salary, demand tickets for his relatives, sit between Jesse Lasky and Will H. Hays at premieres, crab to a producer about a press agent if his seats are behind those of Abe Schwartz of the Evening Blotz, pass judgment on stories written by men whom he does not like personally, and even (as did one) put a sign on the door:

"Tuesday is the day for press agents. Stay out."

There never was a movie critic who didn't get the thrill of a lifetime out of Douglas Fairbanks remembering his name.

II.

Who Reads Critics?

Managing editors have no interest in motion picture criticism because they estimate that only 5 per cent of the total readership looks at a critic's remarks, and that in New York fully a fifth of that 5 per cent is to be found in the motion picture industry. A managing editor does visit prize fights and plays. Usually he has married a feature writer who likes to attend concerts and operas. But in their private lives New York managing editors, with two exceptions, do not pay much attention to movies; hence they do not know one critic from another.

The motion picture editor of the second largest New York evening paper spent five months last year trying to induce his boss to attend a gala premiere of a roadshow film, thereby to convince him that movies now are important in New York. Not only did the editor persistently refuse to attend, but a month later he fired the critic. In the interim he had begun to read his critiques!

Another publisher discharged a movie critic on one day's notice because his name was plastered in ten feet lights on the facade of a Broadway theatre, as endorsing a picture. Until it had been up two weeks, the critic had not even seen his name. The publisher believed someone must have "reached" his critic—though the film in question had been praised by half the reviewers in New York and nationally is a box office hit.

One managing editor believes movie audiences, like his tabloid's readers, are numbskulls and that another bonehead should write for them; he says unabashedly and unqualifiedly that no intelligent person would read a film critic, anyway. Hence this editor does not bother particularly about his selection, merely shifting someone from another department to write picture reviews.

Hearst actually has long since discovered the wisdom of training people to get movie news. Yet his critics, who are in themselves smart women, amount to little in criticism because it is apparently difficult, even for a clever woman, to take a dispassionate, reportorial attitude in reviewing a picture after she has been dealing as a reporter for a month in advance with the star and director concerned.

Raise Their Pay!

The remedy? A minimum salary of $100 a week should be paid motion picture critics in New York, so that they will dispense with free lunches and press agent dinners, and writing autobiographical scenarios that only embarrass producers. Every press agent in New York has a sneaking admiration for Quinn Martin because he declines to attend their functions.

Next, a man who is to be made critic should be sent to Hollywood for six months to infest the studios and learn how pictures are made, so that in criticism he will not demand effects that he should know are presently impossible of achievement. (Consider the pronounced improvement in the criticism of James O. Spearing in The Times for two weeks recently, following his production experience.)

After that, the prospective critic should serve as assistant reviewer for half a year, covering lesser openings and minor pictures. During this time he should be writing according to his publisher's previously defined standard of criticism, whether that be one of straight reporting, personal reaction, statement of audience reaction, or mere opinionated writing (which, however, should be tolerated only in a man who has by five years of sound criticism made his opinion interesting per se). After two years of first-string movie criticism, a man should be changed to other work for a year and then allowed to return. Every critic in New York naturally is stale now, after looking at ten pictures a week for a year or more. Further, this summer many of the films have been bad indeed. The mere viewing of so many pictures in so short a space of time tends to remove a critic from his readers, who are not so hyper-critical, since they see but one film a fortnight.

No dramatic critic in New York started cold as first string critic, without having served an apprenticeship. Every film critic did. Is that—nice?

III.

Modus Operandi

Only at night should reviewers see films. After a comfortable dinner, the critic should attend one film in a night—and in the same spirit in which he would go if a layman: with a genuine desire to enjoy the show. Any critic (and there have been some) who attends a film as part of his job, should be fired.

Critics should arrive on time and see the film from its beginning. They should not sit together in loges but in the orchestra or (better still) the balcony, among patrons who read their papers. The present cliques of two and three critics should be disbanded by themselves, as similarity between reviews is the inevitable result of viewing pictures in pairs or trios, and subsequent chatting about merits and faults of films. The resemblances between certain reviews, in methods of approach and factual content is so palpable as to be mirth-provoking. Many critics read every other reviewer in town—so that their own articles contain less original thought than unconsciously assimilated views of others. Critics should buy their own seats (as does Mr. Percy Hammond and as did Mr. Stuart Olivier, Publisher of The Telegram-Mail in 1925) and in every way possible be made to forget that they are critics by divine right, set apart from other human beings looking at the film. Viewing three pictures on a Sunday afternoon is bad for the second and third picture the critic, and the newspapers' readers. With ten films to be reviewed every weekend, it is stupid to have but one reviewer to a paper.

No previews without music should be given critics, since it is apparently difficult enough for them to estimate a film's drawing power and worth in a theatre under ideal visual and aural conditions, without being left alone in a projection room with a film.

(Concluded next week)

Newsreel Resume

THIS week saw the inauguration of the industry's sixth newsreel service —M-G-M News, billed as "The World's Spotlight," and produced by Hearst News Service, Inc. It features novelty and stunt stuff rather than purely topical news, with a considerable degree of refinement in production. Vol. I, No. 1, presents President Coolidge operating a newsreel camera—truly a distinguished cameraman to have on its new staff. A striking aviation subject, a corking race-track story in which a riderless horse wins a steeplechase in Paris, a thrill subject built around a knife thrower, ending with a punch scene in which the knife is thrown directly at the camera, and a good water subject with cameraman and boat tossed about on the turbulent waters of Cataract Rapids near the Grand Canyon, are among the items in the first release.

Fox News, Vol. 8, No. 92, also has a striking air subject showing a war game participated in by Fort Bliss cavalry and planes from Kelly field, Texas. Taken by Jack McFarland, the subject shows from another plane the maneuvers in which the planes swoop down over the horses and zoom up again to escape the anti-aircraft fire. Some aftermath of the flood, a parade of the king's bodyguard in Rome, a National Guard review in Illinois and miscellaneous events make up the reel.

No. 93 has a Coolidge subject at Mt. Rushmore, a remarkable bridge under construction in France, speedboat races at Cowes, England, a Swiss village festival, surf-boarding at a Jersey resort, dancing girls atop a New York skyscraper, and miscellaneous personalities.

Pathe News, No. 67, shows the welcome of Col. Lindbergh in Detroit, a 70-foot kite built by students in Japan, Lou Gehrig fishing, an interesting Egyptian travel subject, more Chinese revolution, a good human interest baby gorilla story and night blimp maneuvers at Camp Meade.

No. 68 includes the Coolidge and Gutzon Borglum subject at Mt. Rushmore, a Kansas City baby show, a Judge Gary story, shots of the Pacific flight entrants, including Art Goebel, the winner, a Wightman cup tennis subject, sailor maneuvers at Newport, and others.

Paramount News, No. 5, also has military maneuvers, dealing mainly with tank formations at Fort Benning, Ga., the regatta at Cowes, England, with King George's yacht winning, the welcome given Egypt's king at Rome, a stunt subject of Ray Wood, high diver, Honolulu air derby entrants, and miscellaneous news flashes.

No. 6 includes the Wightman cup tennis matches, Coolidge at Mt. Rushmore, the new Jefferson memorial at Charlottesville, Va., where a billion candle-power searchlight is now turned on the statue of him a quarter mile away, the German endurance flight, a volcanic eruption story from Vesuvius, an interesting subject showing the part the horse plays in National Guard maneuvers and activities, and miscellaneous subjects such as Edison on the radio and Thea Rasche's plane in the Hudson.

International Newsreel, No. 66, includes a considerable variety of subjects, such as the races at Goshen, N. Y., the cleaning of Crystal Palace in London, Ziegfeld picking and rehearsing Follies girls, an aquaplane story, Japanese wrestling events, baby lion cubs and the blimp and tank sham battle at Camp Meade.

No. 67 shows ten thousand Turners in an impressive gymnastic display in Germany, Judge Gary, Edison broadcasting, Coolidge at Rushmore, the Forest Hills tennis battle, Franch cadets in trick riding, the Vesuvius eruption, and several others, including a number of regional subjects for certain territories only.

In Kinograms, No. 5317, the subjects include the King and Queen of England visiting Scotland, dancing on a surfboard, Mayor Walker of New York sailing for abroad, a Tunney-Dempsey story, a new cyclone roller coaster at Crystal Beach, Ontario, children at Stroebeck, Germany, in a chess game with living figures, and a monkey driving a motorboat. Four of these are Kinograms exclusives.

No. 5318 shows the Forest Hills tennis matches, personality items on the late Judge Gary, Edison and Coolidge, the fire chiefs' convention in Portland, the Marblehead regatta, an exclusive showing a "one-lung" auto built by Reedsburgh, Wis., youngsters, French girls at a Paris university in gymnastic work, and a thrilling motorcycle race at Springfield, Mass., with shots of an actual collision.

Athletics Will Bring Case to U. S. Supreme Court

In the fight to remove the Sunday baseball ban and all other Sunday commercialized amusements which Pennsylvania prohibits because of the presence on the books of a blue law dating back to 1794, John R. Geyer, of Harrisburg, and Charles G. Gartling, of Philadelphia, announced definitely on August 10 their intention of carrying the issue to the United States Supreme Court. The two are counsels for the Athletics of the American Baseball League.

The action follows the decision of the State Supreme Court against the Sunday sport upholding the Dauphin County Court, of Harrisburg, where the issue was first joined in behalf of Sunday baseball. When the State Supreme Court ruled on the issue two of the justices dissented against the opinion, claiming that the violation of the ancient law is merely a penal offense for which a $4 penalty is provided for by the law. Under this opinion, said the two dissenting judges, the club could continue Sunday baseball by paying the fine and costs provided by the statute.

Preparations for the appeal will not be completed until about October 1, according to Messrs. Geyer and Gartling.

Federal Regulation of Film Corporations Seen As Possibility

FEDERAL regulation of corporations in the film industry looms as an eventuality of the investigation of the fraudulent security situation which has just been ordered by the Federal Trade Commission.

The purpose of the inquiry is to gather and compile arguments for legislation, State or Federal, dealing with corporations, to prevent the sale of "blue sky" securities.

Millions of dollars a year are taken from "hard headed" business men and others who "fall" for the glib talk and attractive literature of the fake stock promotor. The commission has had before it a number of such cases and has issued orders requiring the promotors to cease and desist, but new companies spring up as fast as existing ones are put out of business and members of the commission are coming to the conclusion that only stringent State or Federal regulation of corporations will deal with the situation.

Such regulation would affect the honest as well as the dishonest corporations and, if adopted, would make incorporated concerns in the film industry subject to government regulation in much the same manner as railroads now are controlled. Present corporation laws, it is pointed out by Commissioner Abram F. Myers, sponsor of the Federal Trade Commission's investigation, deal with the business activities of corporations but not with the corporations themselves, and he favors adoption of a plan such as that advocated by Professor Ripley of Harvard University, placing security issues and other corporate activities under strict regulations.

Exhibitors in Southeast "Trading Hard"

Chains, Buying Cautiously, May Make Selling Year-Round Proposition

BUYING conditions in the Southeast are reported from Atlanta as loosening up a bit, but with the chains driving hard bargains and not contracting for their entire season's product at one time. Distributors, as a consequence, are fearing that the selling proposition will be an all-year-round one, with the additional expense of sending men back over the same territory.

With Labor day and the opening of the season but a few weeks off exhibitors are realizing that they must have product and they are now buying slowly and carefully. They realize there is an abundance of product to be had and in most cases they are insistent upon hard bargains.

One of the largest of the independently owned circuits, comprising a few of the larger cities and a number of small towns, with scarcely any opposition, is said to have purchased only the product of one distributing company up to the present time. It is said that one national organization only has succeeded in successfully breaking through and is sold in the key points in the eleven Southern States.

Salesmen are striving hard to push their product and to close for a large volume of business during the selling season, but they are finding it a very difficult proposition with so many pictures on the market and the companies offering complete service.

One salesman well and widely known throughout the Southeastern territory and for years identified with a leading company has declared the selling season will in all probability last throughout the year. He is quoted as follows:

"In towns where our customers usually buy our entire season's product at one time, I am now selling one-fourth to one-half of the scheduled output. To complete the job I will have to go back again. It means covering the same job twice, three or four times, to get the results we got in the past. The merits of the pictures make no difference at present. The exhibitor is cagier and he is going to take his own time and make every effort to get his pictures on his own terms. The salesman's job is going to be even tougher than it has been in the past."

Seven Midwestern Regional Papers Welded Together

"The Reel Journal," Kansas City regional, has banded together two regional papers and created four more which will be operated as a unit. Each publication will retain its own individual identity. The seven papers will together embrace 17 states in the Middle West. They will be published weekly and will maintain several departments similar in nature; some of the material for these departments will be syndicated. Advertising in the seven journals will be sold as a single unit.

The seven papers in the deal which was instigated by Associated Publications, publishers of the Kansas City regional for many years, are, besides the "The Reel Journal," "Movie Age," "Michigan Film Review," "M. P. Digest," "The Ohio Showman," "Film Trade Topics," and "Exhibitors Tribune." The last four publications are new and circulate in Chicago and Indianapolis, Cleveland and Cincinnati, Denver and Salt Lake City, and Oklahoma City and Memphis, respectively.

Ben Shylen is president of Associated Publications maintaining headquarters in Kansas City.

Stanley and Schine Plan New Houses in Syracuse

Assuming that reports published in Chester Bann's column in the Syracuse Herald are correct, the city of Syracuse, New York, is likely to have two new theatres shortly. The column reports that the Stanley Company through the Mark Strand organization will build another house while the Schine chain of theatres will be augmented by a new theatre.

Early in September another addition to the Loew circuit will open in the Loew Canal Street Theatre, at Canal and Ludlow. Loew's Commodore Theatre, Second Avenue and Sixth Street, a recent acquisition will be opened on September 1.

E. C. Sourbier in Control of Central Amusement Co.

Ed G. Sourbier obtained control of the Central Amusement Company stock in a $1,050,000 stock deal this week.

Central Amusement Company owned the Lyric and a Washington St. restaurant site, formerly the location of the old Alhambra theatre. A new corporation known as the Washington and Illinois Realty Company will be formed with Sourbier as president. The corporation will have as its holdings the Central Amusement Company properties. Fletcher American Company, trustee, will offer $875,000 of 6 per cent stock.

Sourbier already owned 25 per cent of the stock. Under the purchase agreement he obtained 54 per cent of Charles Olsen, now president and manager, one per cent of Mrs. Jessie Barton, five per cent from Gene Marks and fifteen per cent of Martin M. Hugg, attorney.

Hugg announced the Apollo, Alamo, Regent houses, in which Marks, Olsen and Hugg are interested, are not affected by the deal.

Lyric is expected to continue present policy.

A Correction

Through an error in our review of "Kid Tricks," an Educational-Big Boy comedy, the direction was wrongly credited to Ford West, an actor, instead of Charles Lamont, who is directing the Big Boy comedies.

Plan Would Cut Stars' Salaries

Producers Said to be in General Movement For Reduction with Present Contracts

IT would seem, according to word from the coast, that big salaries of the motion picture stars may be a thing of the past in the near future, despite the recent peace meetings at which the matter of reduced production costs were thrashed out to the apparent satisfaction of all concerned.

The newest retrenchment move, according to the word, contemplates the reduction of salaries of stars as their present contracts expire, and if they are not satisfied with the reduction figures they will be replaced by players from the ranks, who will be widely exploited, and whom the plan is, to give better play material.

The Los Angeles Times is responsible for the original publication of the story during the week and the giving of the details of the plan. According to the Times the plan was first broached about six months ago when Will H. Hays was in Los Angeles. The move, according to the story, resulted from the determination of the producers to cut salaries. This having failed when Paramount proposed the 10 per cent cut, it is said that the plan now provides for an iron clad agreement binding on all producing factors identified with the Association of Motion Picture Producers.

All existing contracts are to be carried out to the letter. As each one expires the star will be asked to work for a lower salary. Refusal will mean replacement by a player of lower rank. It is figured that a wide exploitation campaign for a year, together with suitable vehicles, will bring comparatively unknown players almost to the prominence of the star.

It is said that all producers must be included in the agreement in order that competition will be eliminated. The danger is seen of competition from the independent producers and that is also said to have been provided for. It is held that the independent producer cannot maintain the high salaries of the stars and that the latter if banned by the larger companies, will have eventually to take smaller salaries.

It is reported that an agreement has been entered into by the larger companies to buy pictures from the independent producers and release them under their own brand name. Since the independent picture would reach the market through the national distributors it is figured the latter would be enabled to exploit the same big names at a lower cost to themselves until they have established their new stars.

Denial of any such proposed plan is made by the producers, many of whom declare they have never heard of it.

Frank Gilmore, executive secretary of the Actors Equity Association, declared the move would be an unwise one, saying that such action would appear to be a conspiracy.

"The part that interests me most," said Gilmore, "is the manner in which, according to the report, the producers may combine to dictate a player's salary. On the face of it, such an action as that reported contemplated, appears to be a conspiracy. The producers would be entirely forgetting the public, which will demand these stars.

"The place to begin cutting down production costs is not with the salary of the actor or actress, which figures as only about 20 to 25 per cent of the cost, but with the other factors of production."

According to the Los Angeles report a number of secret meetings have already been held on the proposition and the new system will go into effect as soon as an ironclad agreement can be arranged. It will then be applied to the stars as their individual contracts expire.

English Merger Cements F B O-Ideal

THE recent merger of British distributing and exhibiting companies, participated in by Ideal Films, Ltd., of London, will have no effect upon the relationship existing between F B O and Ideal announced last September by Joseph P. Kennedy, who at that time had been in control of F B O for about seven months. The merger will really strengthen the F B O-Ideal relationship, fortifying F B O's position through Ideal's theatre connections. The British merger, known as the Gaumont British Corporation, means that Ideal, Gaumont and W. F. Company have come under the same ownership and have acquired the Davis circuit of theatres in the United Kingdom.

Ideal is making elaborate plans for the launching of the F B O product for 1927-28. In the course of a series of luncheons every exhibitor in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales will be entertained. The first luncheon will be held in London on August 26 and will be followed with others in United Kingdom key cities.

Austrian Movie Stars Get About $35 a Day

The maximum rate of pay for moving picture stars in Austria ranges between 500 and 600 schillings for each working day, or in United States money, between $70 and $85, a trade bulletin issued by the Motion Picture Section of the Commerce Department, in Washington, D. C., reveals. Actors and actresses, according to the report, get from 200 to 300 schillings for each working day or from $28 to $43. Ordinary members of the cast receive about $15 for each day they are employed. Supernumeraries are paid 15 schillings per week, but if they are lucky enough to own a dress suit they get an additional 10 schillings, or or what amounts to $3.50.

There are four studios in Austria, all of which are located in the city of Vienna. The "Vita" is the largest. There are about a dozen producers in the country; only four of them, however, are considered important. A good part of the necessary money with which to start production is obtained by Austrian companies through advance payments by foreign concerns for advance bookings, together with moneys secured by the sale of import licenses, whenever this is possible. It is estimated that 40 films will be produced in Austria during the current year. No American companies have ever attempted to produce films in Austria.

The report of Mrs. M. W. Snell, city amusement inspector of Birmingham, Ala., for the first six months of 1927 shows that 8,160 films were viewed by her office, or under the supervision of the Better Films committee, comprised of 119 members and affiliated with 81 organizations, representing more than 3,500 Birmingham residents.

According to the report submitted an average of 340 films are shown in Birmingham each week, the average monthly figure being 1,360. First run pictures viewed in the downtown theatres totaled 248, of which 192 were endorsed by the Better Films committee.

Music Composers to Demand License Fee Ten Cents a Seat from Exhibitors

THE American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers will insist upon a license fee of ten cents a seat for the use of copyrighted music during the coming year, except in instances where exhibitors prove their inability to pay this amount. That is the statement attributed to Silvio Nein of the Society's administrative committee.

The society is issuing notices to exhibitors throughout the country that present agreements below the ten-cent scale will not be renewed with the new year, which in most cases starts September 1st. New applications must be filed to use copyright music during the year.

Previously contracts have been extended from year to year but the society is ending this arrangement in order to enforce the ten-cents license fee.

W. A. Steffes, head of the Northwest exhibitor organization, is to meet with representatives of the society on proposed extension of contracts for his members. Two years ago he secured special concessions based on number of shows weekly and ability to pay.

The recent merger with K-A-Orpheum has brought to the executive personnel E. F. Albee, Marcus Heiman, Edwin G. Lauder, B. S. Moss, F. F. Proctor and S. Z. Poli.

The Board of Directors numbers fifteen: Messrs. Murdock, Albee, Pearson, Heiman, Lauder, DeMille and Moss; and George Armsby and Elisha Walker, of Blair & Co.; Edmund C. There is also an office manager, who is responsible for all details of the physical handling.

Labor Troubles Threaten

Efforts Being Made to Settle Differences Before Contracts Expire

WITH present contracts expiring August 31st, labor troubles again loom as a great menace to exhibitors in many parts of the United States. It is feared in some quarters that there is such a variance between amounts asked by union workers and those set by the exhibitors that there are bound to be a number of walkouts.

Conditions have changed during the past year, according to many of the exhibitors and if the unions insist upon increases a large number of houses will be either forced to close or do without musicians or union labor help. In some places exhibitors are even demanding that the union men accept a reduction in wages.

In the Twin Cities the unions are declared to be on the defensive with the theatres insisting upon a reduction in wages because of poor business caused by a general slump. The exhibitor unit is conferring with musicians, operators and stage hands in an effort to induce them that a cut is imperative if theatres are to continue to operate with union labor.

The agreement in Seattle between musicians, stage hands and operators and the exhibitors expires September 1st. Wage increases are demanded from all quarters and a lively fight is anticipated. Another demand is for the retention of the present existing minimum labor rule, where the number of employees is determined by seating capacity.

In Washington, D. C., the demand of the musicians is for a 20 per cent increase, bringing the scale from $67 to $85 a week. A series of meetings have been held between the theatre owners and musicians and the owners have declared emphatically they will not meet the new demands. Every effort is being made, however, to defer a strike.

The threatened silence of the thirty-five neighborhood motion picture theatres controlled by members of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors League has been averted through an agreement reached by the theatre owners with officials of the Musicians' Union for a reduction in the orchestral personnel of the theatre. The arrangement finally reached is a compromise of the original demand of the theatre owners, who asked for lower wages, a reduction in orchestras and an extension of the Summer season for two weeks, or until September 1.

Under the new plan the orchestras of all the theatres having 850 seats or less will be reduced one man each. Theatres in the 850-seat class will have orchestras of three pieces instead of four, and those with 500 seats or less can be operated with a pianist instead of two pieces of music.

The Summer season is also extended for the two weeks closing on September 1 instead of August 15 as formerly. Houses that rate more than 850 seats are not affected by the new agreement with the Musicians Union.

J. W. White Treasurer Skouras Enterprises

J. W. White, cashier of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis for the past eight years, has resigned from that post and on September 1 will assume the position of treasurer and director of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, operators of the Missouri, Ambassador and Grand Central first-run theatres and the controlling factor in the St. Louis Amusement Company.

White is 36 years old and has resided in St. Louis since boyhood.

New Record is Claimed by Educational

A NEW record for short subjects is claimed by Educational in bookings over Loew's New York Circuit. The Loew bookings show 696 days of solid paying time between August 11 and September 11 for Educational subjects. No other company, it is claimed, ever received such a large number of days in a single month for short features.

"At Ease," Hamilton comedy, is booked to play 154 days, said to be a new high record for any two-reel comedy.

Milliken Attends World's Congress Held at Toronto

Carl Milliken, ex-Governor of Maine and secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, New York City, spent three days at the World's Educational Congress which was held at Toronto, Ontario, during the week of Aug. 8.

While in Toronto, Mr. Milliken had several meetings with people interested in the progress of the motion picture. He discussed the moving picture situation with Miss R. Church, president of the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire; Mrs. J. N. Wood, chairman of the National Committee on Literature and Films of the National Council of Women; Mrs. Johnston, prominent member of the Liberal Women's Association of Ontario; Rev. Gilbert Agar, secretary of the Ontario Social Service Council, and Dr. A. E. Hardy, chairman of Films and Literature Committee of the Ontario Council.

Ex-Governor Milliken was a speaker at the Educational Congress, his subject being the probable development of the motion picture in educational work. While in Toronto, he was the guest of Col. John A. Cooper, president of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada.

Fox Buys "Dollar Princess," Viennese Operetta Hit

The story and music of "The Dollar Princess," a Viennese operetta hit, has been purchased by Winfield R. Sheehan for production by Fox Films. A cable received Monday, August 15, informed the Fox home office of Mr. Sheehan's acquisition. The Fox official personally negotiated the purchase from the widow of the composer, Leo Fall, and Willner and Grunbaum, authors of the book. The operetta was presented on Broadway in 1909 after showings in various European capitals.

One King Production for United Artists in '28

Henry King, director of the Goldwyn production, "The Magic Flame," signed a United Artists contract last week, by the terms of which he will make one Henry King production for release by United Artists in 1928. The King production will probably be based on an original story to be written by Mr. King himself.

New 2-Reelers in Color

Lars Moen, M. P. News Staff Man, Producer with Edna Murphy Starred

THE Cosmopolitan Studio, at 127th Street and Second Avenue, New York is once more bustling with activity. The first new production unit in the East since the general exodus to the Coast several months ago, will start at the Cosmopolitan plant next week.

For the last six months, the North American Society of Arts, Inc., composed of a group of color specialists, headed by Raymond Hood, the architect responsible for the American Radiator Building in New York, and the Chicago Tribune Tower in Chicago; T. E. Lawrence, secretary of the National Terra Cotta Society, and Noble E. Stephens, color consultant, formerly at Columbia University, has been laying plans for the production of a series of Rainbow productions.

On Monday, August 22nd, actual work on the picture will be started. The series, which will be made entirely in Technicolor, will be composed of six two-reel subjects. They will be light, intimate comedy dramas with a novelty angle.

Details of a nation-wide advertising campaign of a scope hitherto not attempted in the short subject field will be announced shortly.

Lars Moen, on a leave of absence from the editorial staff of Motion Picture News, who developed the plan for the series, and who is responsible for the promotion of the project, will act as associate producer and director. Mr. Moen, who is only 26, is probably the youngest man to wield a megaphone in the industry. This marks his return to production after several years spent in developing new methods of continuity and production control which have won the commendation of such outstanding experts as D. W. Griffith and Ralph Block, and which will be given their first full fledged application in the Rainbow series.

Edna Murphy, because of her exquisite blonde coloring, has been cast in the leading feminine role. Miss Murphy left the Coast on Tuesday, (August 16th) and will arrive in New York on Sunday, the 21st. The other principal feminine role will be played by Mabel Swor, who scored heavily in "Broadway Nights" and "Dance Magic."

The title of the production and remainder of the cast will be announced as soon as a selection has been made.

Lars Moen

Donald Weston Bartlett is responsible for the stories and continuities, and is also acting as production manager. Bert Tuey is acting as assistant to Mr. Moen, while Bernard Stearns, formerly with Famous Players and Robert Kane Productions, is art director. Robert Snody is production editor, and camera work will be in the hands of Howard Green.

Max Reinhardt to Direct for United Artists

ONE picture will be produced by Max Reinhardt, renowned German stage craftsman, for release by United Artists, a Salzburg cable which appeared in "The New York Times" asserts. Morris Gest is said to have engineered the deal for United Artists. A modern romance with a European background will probably be Reinhardt's screen production, the first he will have attempted since 1911 when he made the motion picture, "The Isle of Bliss." A story has been written by Rudolph Kommer and Felix Salten and it is said that Reinhardt will begin directing it soon after the first of the year.

Lloyd's Next Will Be His First Outside Hollywood

For the first time in his screen career, Harold Lloyd will film several of the important sequences in his new Paramount comedy in and around New York City. The comedian and his party, occupying two cars, headed East from Los Angeles last Sunday evening, August 14, bound for Gotham. The comedian will work in the East for many weeks securing authentic scenes for his latest story. Lloyd is said to be trying something entirely different than anything that he has ever before attempted on the screen. What he is after is new atmosphere, new environment. Even while producing his present picture, he is said to be planning to make his next offering in one of the principal European capitals.

In Lloyd's party are little Mildred Gloria, his three-year old daughter, Mildred Davies, his wife, John L. Murphy, Ted Wilde, director, Ann Christy, leading lady, John Grey, Lex Neal, Howard Emmett Rogers and Jay A. Fraser, general manager of the Lloyd organization, will come from the West within a few weeks' time.

Lloyd is making his headquarters at the Paramount studio in Astoria.

Distributors Reject Cleveland Zoning Plan Approved by Exhibitors

THE zoning plan is entirely out of Cleveland. For the past three years Cleveland theatres have been zoned and distributors have sold pictures by zones. The general sales managers' meeting in New York last week, however, rejected the new zoning plan entirely.

The new plan was drafted by a committee composed of members of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association and the Film Board of Trade. Each of these organizations has approved the plan before sending it to New York. No explanation for its rejection was given.

Cleveland was one of the first cities to operate under a zoning plan. Objections raised to it in the beginning have gradually been ironed out. Of late there has been very little opposition to it.

The rejection of the zoning plan will not affect protection at all. First run protection will remain just what it has been. Loew's Ohio Theatres, which plays both first and second runs in the city, gets 43 days, or 57 days, protection, depending upon circumstances. They ask no additional protection under the present free-for-all plan.

New Loew-U. A. Houses

Two in Columbus and One in Pittsburgh Will Increase Chain by First of Year

THE Loew-United Artists exhibition alliance is rapidly extending its activities and will shortly have three new houses in the chain. Two of these are in Columbus and one in Pittsburgh, bringing the total number operated by the combination to six.

The first of the new Loew-United Artists houses will open in Columbus on August 21st. This is the Broad, a combination house seating 2,700. The other Columbus house, the Ohio, is not scheduled to open until December. It has 3,300 seats and the policy will be pictures and presentations.

The Penn, the new Pittsburgh house will have its premiere September 5th. It will be operated under a picture and presentation policy. The seating capacity is 3,500. The three houses already in operation by Loew-United Artists are the Century, Valencia and Parkway in Baltimore.

In addition to its activities with United Artists, Loew will add nine houses to its own chain between now and January. The State at Detroit, acquired from the Kunsky interests is scheduled to open August 21st. It has 2,700 seats. The Commodore at Second Avenue and Seventh Street in New York City will be ready with 3,000 seats in September. The Canal, also in New York, will open about the same time with 2,500 seats.

Three Brooklyn houses will be added to the Loew chain before the first of the year. Loew's Oriental is scheduled to open some time in October and will probably be operated under a straight picture policy. It has a 2,800 seat capacity.

The Manor and the Piccadilly, both in the Glatbush section, will be operated under the Loew banner. The former, recently acquired, will be taken over in September, and the latter will be ready for opening in about three months.

The State Theatre at Houston with a seating capacity of 2,500 is scheduled for its premiere October 1st, playing vaudeville. The State at Richmond, Va., will be ready in November. It has 2,500 seats and will probably feature vaudeville. The State at Syracuse with 3,400 seats is scheduled to open about January 1st, under a straight picture policy.

To Confer on Protection

Pettijohn Due for Coast to Discuss Problem with Franklin and Exhibitors

SO serious has become the situation on the Pacific Coast with regard to protection regulations that C. C. Pettijohn of the Hays organization is to leave Los Angeles shortly to confer with Harold B. Franklin, head of West Coast Theatres, which organization is forcing the protection issue.

A series of conferences on the matter has been under way in New York. They brought here from the Coast Ben Berinstein, president of the California M. P. T. O. and member of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A., and W. W. Whitson, a Los Angeles exhibitor. Berinstein and Whitson have been conferring with Will H. Hays, C. C. Pettijohn and Gabriel Hess. R. F. Woodhull was also in attendance.

Out of these conferences came the decision for Pettijohn to make the trip to the Coast to attempt a solution of the situation. A conference will be held there with exhibitor officials on August 22nd.

The latest demand from West Coast is said to be for a minimum of 77 days' protection from theatres generally classed as 25-cent houses. Under the old arrangement 30 days' protection was allowed. The latter plan, according to Berinstein, has been in successful operation for the past three years. About 200 houses in Los Angeles and Southern California are affected by the West Coast demand, according to Berinstein.

According to word from the Coast, Los Angeles has gone on a buying strike, which promises to continue until the protection matter is straightened out. It is said that only about 10 per cent of the usual amount of product has been sold to date.

From Chicago comes the word that Balaban & Katz are employing an opportionment of playing time on a unit basis under the new policy, which embodies the circuit's program to secure extended protection throughout the territory.

Under the system is determined at the outset of the buying season the number of playing days to be given each distributor during the year. A company is apportioned a certain number of units, determined by the number of pictures bought by B. & K. Pictures are playing according to this schedule with each showing a unit. If a picture is held over for an extended run it consumes one or more additional units on the schedule.

"Protection" Meeting in Kansas City Postponed

A meeting in Kansas City this week, at which it was hoped to settle the controversy between first run houses, suburban and small town theatres in the Kansas City territory, was postponed for a few days. In the meantime both sides are remaining stubborn and refuse to budge an inch. The first run houses, which now have 60-day protection on first runs in Kansas City, Mo., are seeking 30-day protection from all theatres within sixty miles of Kansas City, which would not only mean small towns, but also Kansas City, Kas., a city of 135,000 population. Pending the outcome of the situation Kansas City exchanges have taken no move in either direction.

Film Executive in New York Mayor's Cabinet

The cabinet of the mayor of New York City claims a film man as one of its members. Richard C. Patterson, president of the Peacock Motion Picture Company of Shanghai, has been appointed Commissioner of Corrections, succeeding Frederick Wallis, resigned.

Mr. Patterson, who has taken but little part in New York politics, does not intend to forsake the film industry. He will leave much of the actual direction of the Peacock company, which distributes First National films in China, in the hands of Luther M. Jee, a native of China and a graduate of Harvard and the University of Southern California.

M. B. Lee of Sterling Weds Philadelphia Girl

Manfred B. Lee, who handles all publicity and advertising for Sterling Pictures Distributing Corporation, joined the ranks of the Benedicts last Saturday, August 13, when he was married to Miss Betty Miller of Philadelphia. The couple are spending their honeymoon in New York City.

Ten Salesmen Elected to F. N.'s K. O. Club

Five salesmen were elected to membership in First National's K. O. Club of high powered salesmen making the best records during each quarter of the year, and five others were re-elected, bringing the number up to ten. Four of the re-elected men were elected for the second time while one was elected to the club for the third time and is therefore privileged to wear the gold K. O. button.

A. P. Bibber of the Boston office is the gold button wearer in the club. Second degree members are W. B. Collins, of the Detroit branch; W. A. Burke, of the Kansas City exchange; F. A. Loftus, of the Philadelphia branch, and S. D. Chapman, of the Detroit exchange. The five new members of the club are J. H. Briggs, Montreal branch; Gerald M. Hoyt, St. John exchange; George Bourke, Los Angeles branch; William J. Melody, Toronto office, and S. J. Ullman, New Jersey branch.

Turpin Comedy on Pathe's Program for August 28

"Love's Languid Lure," a Ben Turpin comedy, heads the Pathe short subject program for the week of August 28. Nine releases in all make up the short features that will go out from the Pathe exchanges during the last week of the present month. Also included are "With Love and Hisses," featuring the Roach stars; "An Oriental Album," the first of the new Rarebits series; the initial chapter of "The Hawk of the Hills," new Patheserial; Pathe Review and Topics of the Day, Number 35; "Hook, Line and Sinker," an Aesop Film fable, and two issues of the Pathe News, Numbers 72 and 73.

Earl Rodney directed the Turpin comedy, which has Peggy Montgomery, Sunshine Hart, Irving Bacon, William McCall and Jack Cooper in support. In the Hal Roach number Jimmy Finlayson, Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy are the trio that cut up; they were directed by Fred Guiol. In the Pathe Review issue are "Concerning Babies," "The Town of Tomorrow" and "The Seal Hunt."

Vita. Signs Scenarists for Presentation Gags

A NEW field for the scenarist is indicated by an announcement from S. L. Warner, in charge of Vitaphone production at the new Hollywood studio, that he has signed Murray Roth ad Grant Clark, scenarists, to write exclusively for the Vitaphone. Their work will consist of supplying gags and drama for future Vitaphone numbers. Mr. Warner believes that the Vitaphone, as a medium of presentation, must get away from the old form of straight presentations which still prevails. The tendency of the future will probably be to devote more time and care to plots and stories, to try something new in the presentation game.

Both Roth and Clarke are now working on a Vitaphone presentation. Bryan Foy will direct their productions under the supervision of Mr. Warner.

Keen Competition in N. W.

West Coast Will Launch Busy Campaign With "Greater Movie Season"

THE Pacific Northwest is looking forward to the greatest competition in the exhibition of pictures in its history during the coming Fall, with all sorts of combinations being effected and strenuous individual chain efforts being put forth in an effort to corral business.

West Coast Theatres starts the ball a-rolling with the "Greater Movie Season" which will be inaugurated August 19th at Seattle, Portland, Tacoma, Bellingham and other cities in Washington and Oregon. At the time this chain will also usher in the "Greater Movie Season" in all of its houses from Vancouver to San Diego.

Harold B. Franklin, President of West Coast, says it will be the most ambitious program so far conceived by the group and that it will combine better pictures blended with uplift and education. He claims the cooperation of civic organizations in every city where West Coast has a theatre.

Among information gleaned from Seattle is that West Coast will jointly operate the new 3,000 seat Seattle Theatre in Seattle with Publix and Loew when that house opens this Winter. Wesco is also reported taking over the George B. Guthrie Theatres at Salem, Oregon, including the Elsinore, Oregon and Grand.

The Columbia Theatre in Seattle, owned and operated by Universal, has announced through Robert W. Bender, Managing Director of the Universal Northwest chain, that it will play the leading Paramount pictures for the coming season.

Fox pictures will be played at the Pantages Theatres in Seattle, Portland and Tacoma at regular admission prices, in conjunction with Pantages vaudeville. The Orpheum Theatre will open soon with a combined motion picture and vaudeville policy for the first time in the history of the circuit in the Northwest. Pathe-De-Mille pictures will be the feature attractions.

The Mayflower, a new 3,000 seat independent house under construction and backed by Seattle capital, has booked the entire Tiffany product and will open in December of this year. West Coast has announced that their Majestic Theatre in Portland will soon be a United Artists house. It will be entirely remodeled and is expected to open about October 15th.

Will Exploit Pictures

M. P. T. O. A. Announces Exploitation Division Will Be Operating Shortly

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are about to launch an exploitation division, as proposed by National President Woodhull and Business Manager O'Toole at the Columbus convention. In co-operation with the producers it is hoped to raise the standard of production to a point where the pictures may be the main attraction in picture houses, thus eliminating to a large extent elaborate presentations and special concert and musical acts.

According to the announcement by the M. P. T. O. A. theatre owners will be aided in the proper exploitation of pictures by practical exhibitors of nation-wide prominence in making their pictures pay. Details of the activities of the exploitation division will be announced in the near future.

It is the purpose of the officials of the M. P. T. O. A. to confer with producing elements with a view to so elevating picture standards from an entertainment and box-office standpoint as to make it entirely practical to stand on the picture alone and with intelligently directed exploitation sell it to the public.

In discussing better picture production and making pictures stand on their own, the statement says:

"To do this producers and distributors must adhere to the plain lines of truth in selling and aiding in the exploitation of pictures. As matters stand now in the greater number of instances the exploitation books give little information. One would suppose they were written academically without the writer ever having seen the picture. In fact we are advised that this is too often the case."

The M. P. T. O. A. claims to have in process of formation a comprehensive program nation-wide in character which will prove a powerful aid to theatre owners in intelligently and effectively marketing the picture, and entirely satisfactory to the public.

Brenon and "Sorrell" Unit Return to Hollywood

The "Sorrell and Son" producing company headed by its director, Herbert Brenon, arrived in Hollywood last Saturday night, August 13, on the Lake Shore Limited. The homecoming was the last leg of a 12,000 mile location trip for four days of shooting in actual locales of the story. The party arrived in New York from England on the S.S. Mauretania, Friday, August 12. The director said that his picture would be photographed, cut and titled by October 1. His film is nine-tenths completed and but one more scene, a retake, has to be filmed in Hollywood. Changes in the story are but minor, said Mr. Brenon.

Singer Publicity-Advertising Mgr. First Div.

Aaron Singer, newspaper man with Chicago, Cleveland and New York dailies with whom he served as special and staff writers, has been appointed publicity and advertising manager for First Division Distributors.

U. S. Players in England

Production Reported on Increase, With Many Americans Being Featured

By ELIZABETH LONERGAN

Staff Correspondent of Motion Picture News and Kinematograph Weekly

London, August 1.

THAT the pictures being made at this time in British Studios have many names of interest to Americans, will no doubt prove of trade value if distributed over here later on. According to Kine Weekly, some sixty nine pictures have been made, are being made, or will be within the next few months.

I have visited some half dozen productions in the making and found among them familiar names and faces. St. Margaret's Studio, one of the smaller ones, was putting on "Somewhat Good." It is a British Pathe production with Stewart Rome, recently returned from Hollywood, as hero and Fay Compton who played "Ophelia" to John Barrymore's "Hamlet" as the other lead. Of interest also, are J. B. Sloane and his wife who were associated with the old Lasky Studio in London and who more recently went to the Continent in charge of production for "Madame Sans Gene." Mr. Sloane is in charge of the "Somewhat Good" production with his wife looking after the scripts.

At Isleworth, another Englishman not back long from overseas, Harley Knowles, was directing "The Land of Hope and Glory."

Lynn Harding returned to England after finishing several important films (among them, of course, "When Knighthood Was In Flower"). Elline Terriss, sister of Tom Terriss, is making her debut on the screen in a marvelous mother role. Kenneth McLaghlen, youngest member of the famous family, is cast for a small role in the film.

Of great interest in our country will undoubtedly be the first picture written and produced by young Anthony Asquith. It is called "Shooting Stars" and has considerable Greenwich Villagy atmosphere.

Mr. Asquith spent much time in Hollywood and will no doubt use some of the knowledge acquired there in his production.

At Islington (the studio built by Famous Players-Lasky some years ago), the atmosphere seemed even more American. T. Hayes Hunter was directing "One of the Best" with the scenario by P. L. Mannock, editor of Picturegoer. Carlyle Blackwell is the hero.

Clifford Pember, Art Director, has been associated with productions of A. H. Woods and the Theatre Guild. Kay Loewen, in charge of the script, worked on "The Beloved Rogue" for United Artists and recently returned to London. Best known of all to writing folks is W. G. O'Bryen, who was for a long time associated with Curtis Brown in New York. He is in charge of the publicity and casting of "One of the Best."

At Ellstree, the new modern studio which "Jaydee" built, the filming of an original story, "The King," was in progress. Carl Brisson, matinee idol, is making his first British film. He has worked before in Great Northern films with Victor Seastrom and so has Continental following. His leading lady is Lillian Hall-Davis who will be remembered for her fine work in "Quo Vadis."

I met here the other lead, Ian Hunter, who has deserted the stage temporarily for a picture career. He was a member of the all star cast of "The School For Scandal" in America, last season.

Henry Victor came home the other day and was immediately signed up for "Luck of the Navy" in which he plays a navy hero. Work starts soon.

Maurice Elvey is filming "The Further Adventures of the Flag Lieutenant," an original story which has Henry Edwards in lead. I expect to visit this production later and also will see Syd Chaplin at work in "A Little Bit of Fluff," which though not an American success, ran for three years in London and later was taken on tour.

Several pictures with good American angles have been finished, cut and are almost ready for shipment. Among the Broadway (and London) stage successes that are completed, or almost so, are "The Vortex" "The Fake" and "Easy Virtue" with "The Constant Nymph" in the course of casting.

Admission Tax Repeal Seems Unlikely

Increased Defense Appropriations Hurt Chances of Any But Slight Slash

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Material increases in appropriations for the national defense next year, carried to the Black Hills by Director of the Budget Herbert M. Lord and there approved by President Coolidge, will make impossible a tax cut of anything like the $300,000,000 originally planned and may prove the stumbling block to the repeal of the admission tax, it is now feared in Washington. Nevertheless, it is believed, political expediency will require a tax cut of some kind, and Treasury officials are now casting about for means whereby it can be effected.

Administration supporters here frankly admit that the prospects for a sizeable tax slash at the next session are not promising, in view of the Treasury Surplus at the end of the next fiscal year now being estimated at only $214,000,000. While none of the leaders now in Washington would comment upon the subject, it was plain that they were disturbed about the possibility of another tax cut, as has been virtually promised by the administration. According to reports from the summer White House, both the President and General Lord appeared greatly concerned over the tax reduction problem.

Receipts for the next fiscal year are estimated at $3,776,000,000 while the total estimate for the running of the Federal Government next year is $3,561,000,000, exclusive of the operation of the postal service but including $140,000,000 for tax refunds and $75,000,000 for permanent and definite annual expenses.

Exclusive of these two items, there will be required a total of $3,316,000,000, which is $16,000,000 in excess of the limit set by the President. It is reported that the President and General Lord, during the study of the preliminary figures, endeavored to cut the total amount down to the $3,300,000,000 originally set by the former as the limit for expenditures of the Federal Government in 1929, and succeeded in paring the estimates submitted by the 43 departments and independent bureaus to the extent of $19,000,000.

While the smallness of the estimated surplus is unmistakably the cause of great concern among administration leaders, as it lessens prospects for a tax reduction, it is also felt here that Congress will appropriate considerably more than the amount of the budget as presented by the President, because of urgent projects such as flood relief and control, possible farm relief, the building of Boulder Dam and the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project. This situation adds to the disappointment of the administration leaders, who feel the urgency of the promised $300,000,000 reduction in taxes at the next session of Congress.

Fox Will Erect Stores Along With St Louis House

The Fox Theatres Corporation will erect 16 stores in conjunction with the 5,000-seat theatre now under construction on Grand Boulevard just South of Washington Boulevard in St. Louis. The new building will front 175 feet on Grand Boulevard to a depth of 308 feet. Originally the Fox interests planned to tear down the Humboldt Building and erect a gigantic hotel and studio apartment structure on its site and also intended to construct a 17-story building on the front of the lot occupied by the theatre structure, but it is understood that these plans have been abandoned definitely.

Key City Reports

New York City

WITH two new specials on Broadway at the two-dollar scale and the Roxy showing its first super since opening, things were looking up on Broadway this week. At the Criterion, "Wings" opened with an advance sale reported at $8,600, and is understood to be sold out for two weeks.

"The Patent Leather Kid" made his bow at the Globe on Monday night, and Tuesday's matinee was crowded. While not regarded by many as spectacular enough for a roadshow, the picture is an unquestioned success and will do its star great good.

The Roxy has "What Price Glory" this week and did more than $18,000 on Monday alone. It will continue next week. Last week the house did good but not remarkable business on "Don Juan."

The Capitol, where Shearer always seems to draw strongly, is doing well this week with "After Midnight." "Adam and Evil" did reasonably well last week.

The Strand had a satisfactory gate last week with "The Stolen Bride." "Barbed Wire" at the Paramount did good business, but somewhat below $70,000.

"The Way of All Flesh" goes along at a steady rate at the Rialto, but "Topsy and Eva" proved rather disappointing at the Rivoli. "The Big Parade" still does well. "The King of Kings" is not worrying. "Seventh Heaven" is tapering off, and probably will not be held at the advanced scale much longer. "Old San Francisco" is holding steady at Warners.

Boston

EARLY opening of closed theatres in down town Boston is forecast by the activity of theatre managers this week, as a result of the unusually heavy business done by all of those theatres which have remained open during the vacation season. No explanation is forthcoming for the big outpouring of theatregoers this week but box office returns have broken all former mid-summer records. Waiting lines in front of many of the theatres reminded one of mid-winter scenes, minus the snow.

For the first time in weeks the Metropolitan Theatre could not provide seats as rapidly as the demand existed. Gene Rodemich's Met Merry Makers gave a much briefer program than usual. "Moon of Israel" was the feature.

Loew's State Theatre seems to have hit its stride and is holding its audiences despite sun or rain, heat or cold. This week has far exceeded a year ago at the same time. "Alias The Deacon" is the film. Barbette is the stage number.

"Colleen" and "Matinee Ladies" are the features for the double bills at the twin houses, Modern and Beacon, playing to new mid-summer records. "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary" at the Keith-Albee Boston showed good grosses.

"Firemen Save My Child" is playing simultaneously at the Washington Street Olympia, Scollay Square Olympia, Central Square, Capitol and Fenway Theatres and all five houses report excellent business.

"The Claw" and "The Romantic Age" supply the features at the University; "The Better 'Ole" and "Naughty But Nice" at the Lancaster and "Dance Magic" and "The Brute" at the Exeter.

After this week the "Follies" move on to New York and "A La Carte" completes its run at the Tremont and also goes to New York, but next week sees the opening of three more legitimate houses, the Shubert with musical comedy, the Copley with an original production and the Hollis with a farce. The Wilbur opened this week with musical comedy. All of which is mentioned to show that the legitimate managers have been keeping their eyes on the picture theatre box offices and believe that reopening of their theatres from one to three weeks earlier than usual is a wise bit of business on their part.

Los Angeles

ALTHOUGH West Coast greater movie season will not formally open until next week, Million Dollar stole a march by showing, "Firemen, Save My Child." Patrons filled the theatre to capacity at each performance.

The Metropolitan had a good week playing, "The Stolen Bride" shown in conjunction with Rube Wolf on the stage and Fanchon & Marco's, "Kiddie Revue."

"Adam and Evil" at Loew's State did well, as it is an entertaining picture and the cast is popular here.

The Uptown offered, "Lonesome Ladies" and had its share of the week's patronage for the theatres.

"The King of Kings" at Grauman's Chinese is still pulling at the box office particularly at the Sunday evening performances as Sid is presenting a musicale in addition to the picture and prologue.

"Seventh Heaven" at Carthay Circle has not slipped any in its appeal to the public as the box office receipts show for the week.

Atlanta

A FLUCTUATING weather program combining rain, excessive heat and cool fall days probably had its effect upon Atlanta theatres. However, as a whole, business has been an average box office, with the latter part of the week bringing up the slow beginning.

Loew's Grand can boast of the most popular picture, "Twelve Miles Out," with John Gilbert.

Keith's Georgia drew a good crowd with "Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary."

"Chang," at the Howard, was liked and received highest praise by local critics. However, business on it was only average. The public is slow to try this kind of picture, regardless of merit. Those seeing it voiced strong approval and appreciation.

At the Capitol Blanche Sweet in "Singed" proved an entertaining feature. Thursday, the showman's weak day, was one of the largest the theatre has had since its opening in June.

The German production, "Metropolis," played at the Rialto. Although Manager Murray estimates it as one of the best pictures he has ever shown, and theatrical critics have lavishly praised it, its reception was weak. But it passed the test of a good picture—business increased from day to day. Part of the failure to make the picture a go was the lack of advertising.

"On Ze Boulevard," at the Metropolitan, failed to attract much attention. Business fell below the average.

The Tudor enjoyed a good week with the split bill composed of "Dangerous Odds," "Easy Money," and "Rambling Galoot."

Also, the New Alamo, playing "Empty Hearts" and "Rose of the Desert," with two second runs, had a successful week.

Philadelphia

TWO widely heralded events, "Roxy Week" at the Fox and Paul Whiteman and his orchestra at the Stanley, drew most of the down town patronage to those two houses and the other theatres consequently report only fair summer business.

S. L. Rothafel presented his famous Gang to Fox audiences in a program hard to beat to crowded houses every day. The feature was "A Million Bid."

At the Stanley Paul Whiteman and his orchestra were given a tremendous reception, and also played to packed houses all week.

Two notable returns are John Barrymore in "Don Juan" at the Stanton, and "The Covered Wagon" at the Arcadia, both at popular prices, which may have had something to do with the welcome they received.

The first week of "Chang," at the Aldine, showed good box office receipts.

The Karlton, with Johnny Hines in "White Pants Willie," the Palace with "On Ze Boulevard," the Capitol with Mary Astor in "The Sunset Derby," and the Victoria with "Tillie, the Toiler," all report average summer business.

Salt Lake City

ALL records were broken at the Pantages Theatre here during the past week during the showing of "The Big Parade," is is announced. This picture was shown for the price of fifty cents, which is reported to be the lowest price as yet accepted for this big special. This picture is to be shown the coming week also.

Emil Jannings, in "The Way of All Flesh," did a phenomenal summer business at the Paramount Empress, it is reported. The week's showing of "After Midnight" with Norma Shearer and Lawrence Gray at the Victory was also splendidly received.

The American Theatre presented the last of their double feature programs last week, consisting of Matt Moore and Edith Roberts in "The Mystery Club," and Lillian Rich in "God's Great Wilderness," and moderately good business was enjoyed.

"The Sea Wolf" proved to be a drawing card at the Gem here, where it was shown as first run, large crowds having been drawn.

Zane Grey's "The Mysterious Rider" was a very popular feature, and drew exceptionally big business at the Rialto, a second run house.

Albany

THERE probably was never a better example, in Albany at least of the wisdom of showing fine entertainment during the summer months than that afforded during the past week at the Mark Strand with "Barbed Wire." Of course, the weather, becoming cool and delightful, contributed to the success not only at the Mark Strand but at other theatres in town, from the standpoint of attendance.

The Mark Strand ran close to midwinter business during the week. In addition to the feature there were two Vitaphone presentations. At the Leland, also a downtown house, "Slaves of Beauty" went over exceptionally well, playing to capacity business throughout the entire week. The Mark Ritz had an excellent week's business in Tom Mix in "The Circus Ace," the picture starting off with a heavy business on Monday and showing no let down during the days that followed. Proctor's Grand, a vaudeville house, drew heavily with "Clancy's Kosher Wedding."

In Schenectady, it is rather hard to gauge the drawing power of a picture these days, due to the fact that business is not good generally. At the State, "Ladies at Play" did only fair, while at the Strand, double features are now being used. Neighborhood houses in Albany report business as only about normal, but Harmanus-Bleecker Hall, which lies midway between the business and the residential section of the city, reports business as excellent.

Baltimore

"CAPTAIN SALVATION" clicked heavily with the public in Baltimore at Loew's Century during the week beginning Monday, August 8, with the program including also Phil Spitalny with his band and Sylvia Sanderson. That production was advertised heavily in the two Hearst newspapers here.

For its second week at Loew's Valencia, "Chang" proved a heavy patron puller and other theatres where good business was done during the week included the Rivoli with the former Baltimorean Ben Lyon in "Dance Magic;" Keith's Hippodrome with "Backstage," and five acts of family vaudeville and Warner's Metropolitan with "Slaves of Beauty" and Vitaphone attractions on the program also.

"Cheating Cheaters," went over fair with audiences at the New Theatre and at Whitehurst's Garden "Three Miles Up" with five acts of family vaudeville proved a fair drawing card.

San Francisco

ANOTHER record was made by San Francisco theatres for the manner in which the houses were crowded last week. The report comes from the office of A. M. Bowles, division manager of West Coast Theatres, that more people have attended the leading downtown houses during the week just past than any similar period in years.

And the odd feature of it all, Bowles says, is that two of the four first run theatres he manages were offering that type of picture which generally is characterized as an "artistic achievement, but financial failure." "He refers to "Chang," the picpicture of wild life and the "Way of All Flesh." "Chang" did well at the California Theatre, both the first and second weeks. But a larger crowd was expected the evenings the second week, just past, it was shown.

"The Way of All Flesh," made another record the week just past, so to the surprise of all it will be held over the fifth week. The picture "Metropolis" did exceptionally well at the Granada Theatre. The doors and hallways continually packed for the entire week and all were surprised it was not held over for the second week. "College" attracted a good crowd to the Loews Warfield Theatre, which, together with the stage acts and the one by young jumpers and dancers and Nell Kelly, packed the house each day and night.

"The Unknown Cavalier," the feature and the comedy "Break Away," together with the acts of vaudeville kept the Union Square Theatre filled. "See You in Jail," the photoplay feature, together with acts of vaudeville filled the Golden Gate Theatre and "Slaves of Beauty" together with vaudeville acts filled the Pantages Theatre.

Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS exhibitors had reason to rejoice last week, for they experienced that happy combination of good box office attractions and ideal weather. As a result business was brisk at most of the movie houses.

John Gilbert drew excellent crowds at the State in "Twelve Miles Out." He is always popular there, and his latest picture was no exception. Leo Darillo and the Four Aristocrats on the Vitaphone were a nice addition to the program, and the presence of David Rubinoff, popular local violinist, on the program, undoubtedly was a magnet for some. The Lyric did a beautiful business with the Dempsey-Sharkey fight pictures and were forced to hold them over for a second week. Johnny Hines in "White Pants Willie" was also on the program, but it was rather generally suspected that the fight pictures were the big attraction.

Pantages resurrected Pola Negri's "Passion," gave it the benefit of some good advertising and had a good week at the box office. The Strand, with Charlie Murray and George Sidney in "Lost at the Front," experienced just a fair week. The Hennepin-Orpheum showed "Paying the Price," with Mary Carr and Priscilla Bonner and the Seventh Street, the other Orpheum house here, showed Viola Dana in "The Lure of the Night Club" with good results.

It was another good week for the neighborhood houses, including the Lagoon, Rialto, Lyndale and Loring. Pictures shown at these theatres included Colleen Moore in "Naughty But Nice," "Mr. Wu," and "The Unknown."

Indianapolis

BUSINESS is picking up the last half of the summer for Indianapolis movie houses. Last week brought moderately good box office receipts with weather conditions favorable.

A good summer season for Stuart Walker and Berkell stock companies has cut movie business somewhat.

Richard Dix, in "Manpower," drew well at the Indiana, Publix house, last week. The Circle had a fairly good week with "Captain Salvation."

"Frisco Sally Levy" was at the Ohio, and did normal run. Closing of the Palace temporarily turned some business to movies.

Cleveland

LOCAL first-run business was very satisfactory last week. Business has been steadily improving since the installation of cooling plants and there is every indication that the season will soon be in full swing.

"The Big Parade" heads the list of box office attractions. It continued to play to full houses during its fourth and last week at the Stillman, where it was offered for the first time at popular prices. It could easily have played longer, but had to make way for other attractions. "The Stolen Bride" coupled with jazz week presentations, drew consistently large audiences to the Allen. B. F. Keith's Palace did exceptionally big business with "Ten Commandments" as the feature attraction, surrounded by an entertaining vaudeville program. "Quincy Adams Sawyer," plus vaudeville, did average business at the State. The picture was more interesting as an example of contrasts than on its own merits. "The Missing Link!" had a very good second week at the Cameo, which is specializing in feature comedy attractions. "Easy Pickings" did just fairly well at the Park. It had too much mystery and too much drama for summer consumption. "The Heart Thief" was enthusiastically received both at Keith's East 105th St. and at Reade's Hippodrome. A good cast and amusing story combined to make this good entertainment fare. "Arizona Nights," at the Hippodrome, the last half of the week went over successfully as most westerns do. "The Naked Truth" just concluded its sixth week at the East Ninth St., and is still being continued. The Circle continues with its summer policy of daily change revivals. A change in policy at the Circle will be announced shortly. Neighborhood houses continue to report poor business.

Seattle

FARM weather, rather than pictures, formed the principal competition for the Fifth Avenue Theatre last week, but in spite of the hottest week of the season this house succeeded in playing to very large audiences at every performance, for a total gross of close to $19,000. "Twelve Miles Out" was the film attraction, with Fanchon-Marco's "Hoops M' Idea" on the stage and Eddie Peabody still a literal magnet as master of ceremonies and orchestra director extraordinary. The film, incidentally, was less popular than the society type of Gilbert films in the past.

The Columbia Theatre, playing "Painting the Town," did a pleasing week's gross business, considering everything. "The Black Diamond Express" at the Blue Mouse, in conjunction with four new Vitaphone acts headed by Waring's Pennsylvanians, played its first week to very good houses.

"Too Many Crooks," at the Coliseum, failed to arouse much enthusiasm and business at that house was off. "Ten Modern Commandments," at the United Artists Theatre, was another rather mediocre box office attraction. "Easy Pickings," at Pantages, and "The Beauty Shoppers," at the Embassy, were average program attractions.

In the neighborhood houses, "The Better 'Ole," at Hamrick's Egyptian, did a majority of the business, playing to very good houses for the entire engagement.

Summed up roughly, it is apparent that the week was quite noticeably below normal attendance.

St. Louis

FOR the first time in many, many weeks an honest to goodness motion picture had an opportunity of standing strictly on its own two feet as an entertainment feature at one of the so-called motion picture palaces of St. Louis. And this picture, "What Price Glory," playing for the first time at popular prices after having played the town as a road show a year or so ago, went across big at Loew's State Theatre.

Out at the Missouri Theatre on Grand Boulevard Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton teamed together again in "Fireman, Save My Child." Judging by the applause it did not get this so-called comedy failed to add anything to the fame Beery and Hatton have won in past screen offerings. However, the Missouri enjoyed a very good week as Ted Lewis and his band were on the stage and went over big.

The Ambassador offered Norma Talmadge in a Twentieth Century version of "Camille" as its screen attraction, and the picture was very well received by patrons and critics. Business of the week was fairly good when all local conditions were taken into consideration.

The St. Louis Theatre combined Belle Bennett in "The Fourth Commandment" and several acts of Orpheum Circuit vaudeville and as usual receipts were up to expectations.

Business at the neighborhood theatres of St. Louis continues off. Reports from Southern Illinois are still adverse. The coal strike is still in full force in Egypt.

Kansas City

ATTENDANCE remained just about at the normal mark in all first run houses of Kansas City this week, the only exception being at the Royal theatre, where the first week of Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton in "Fireman, Save My Child," drew big crowds all week, thereby assuring a second week's run.

At the Newman, Thomas Meighan in "We're All Gamblers," held up well all week, being slightly above the previous week. "The Stolen Bride," with Billie Dove, at the Main Street played to average attendance, as did "The Romantic Age" at the Liberty.

Syd Chaplin, in "The Missing Link" at the Globe Theatre, in conjunction with the Vitaphone program, drew good all week.

Ottawa

COOL evenings and a public holiday during the week of August 8 made the situation very pleasant for most of the exhibitors in Ottawa, Ontario. B. F. Keith's Theatre had them standing up three and four deep at the back of the orchestra floor for matinee performances, the film attraction, incidentally, being "The Telephone Girl."

"San Francisco," as a title, means little or nothing in Ottawa, but good summer crowds turned out at the Regent Theatre to see Dolores Costello, the youthful star of this film drama. They found that they liked the picture after all.

Because of the strong French element in Ottawa, it might have been thought that "On Ze Boulevard" would have drawn well at the Imperial Theatre, but the result was "just fair." It seems that picture fans have been fooled several times in recent months by pictures with Frenchy titles but having nothing more Parisian than a few interior sets that fail to ring true.

Business at the Centre Theatre was steady but not sensational for "The Husband Hunters, which played the first half, and "The Mysterious Rider" which occupied the screen for the last three days. The Canadian Government picture of the visit of the Prince of Wales to Ottawa helped, but then the Regent and Keith's also had a share of the British Heir's views for good measure.

The Francais had quite an assortment with "Valencia" for two days; "Ankles Preferred" for the next two, and then a double bill, "The Trap" and "Blarney" for Friday and Saturday. The backs of seats were quite conspicuous at some performances and there was little in the shape of a rush at any time.

"Moulders of Men" was the type of picture they like at the Eden Theatre in Hull, Quebec, and patronage was fair.

Detroit

FINANCIAL conditions are steadily improving at the downtown houses here. An increase in industrial activities and fine theatre weather have caused heavy contributions to flow around the box office.

The Michigan did very well with "Service for Ladies," some extremely large crowds attending the matinees. Nearly all the Menjou followers turned out to see Adolphe in waiter's uniform.

"Painting the Town," at the State, brought good-size attendance. It was billed along with a stage presentation headlining Fred Stritt. Early evening performances drew the big coin, but the other shows also went along nicely.

Two hold overs, "The First Auto" and "Fireman, Save my Child," attracted fair attention during a final week showings at the Madison and Adams.

The Capitol with "Alias the Deacon" and a stage show rated highly this week. Business was fine here every afternoon and evening.

At the Colonial "Snowbound" went over in fine style, heavy business being noticed throughout the greater part of the week. Ben and Lou Cohen are highly pleased with the results obtained from this booking.

Milwaukee

THE national convention of Eagle in Milwaukee this week and the attendant attractions, were instrumental in boosting the receipts of down town theatres. Business was good throughout the week; in fact so much better than previous weeks that managers were in most jovial spirits.

"The Stolen Bride" at the Wisconsin, supported by a good stage presentation was apparently the most popular picture on the avenue, and drew excellent business. "The Blood Ship," at the Garden, was always well attended, and brought the week's business a bit above the average. "Back to God's Country," the Alhambra's feature, was a favorite with theatre goers. "The Prince of Head Waiters," at the Merrill, drew fair business, and the "Ten Modern Commandments" played to fairly good houses at the Strand. "Is Your Daughter Safe?", playing at the Davidson for an indefinite period, is doing only fair business. "Dearie" vied with the headliners on the Orpheum bill this week for popularity. "The Clown" added greatly to the enjoyment of the bill at the Majestic.

Neighborhood houses did not feel the increase in business to the extent the down town theatres did, but nevertheless, business was average or a little above.

Central Pennsylvania

BUSINESS continued at a fair pace for midsummer in the leading Harrisburg theatres, during the week, due in considerable measure to the fine class of attractions offered. Clever comedy for the most part predominated. At the Colonial the offering was "Lost at the Front," starring Charley Murray and George Sydney, and it was put across in a way that was quite acceptable to the box office. Interest in the Colonial's bill for the week was further stimulated, however, by the showing also of the adventures of Colonel and Mrs. Harry K. Eustace in hunting white rhinoceros in Africa.

"The Callahans and the Murphys," with Marie Dressler and Polly Moran, supported by a thoroughly capable company, at Loew's Regent, provided a whirlwind of fun just suited to drive away the summertime blues.

Critics, however, declared that Adolphe Menjou, in "Service for Ladies," shown at the Victoria, was far and above the finest film play shown in Harrisburg in many weeks, the impression being strong that it is the best thing even the inimitable Adolphe ever has done.

The Broad Street Theatre featured a "grand opening" on Friday, August 12, when the picture house, which had been closed for several weeks for improvements, was thrown open again under the new management of T. B. Reckard. Fred Thompson and his horse, Silver King, in "Silver Comes Thru," was the main attraction, and good business was done on the two days of the week that the theatre was operating.

Tampa

CONDITIONS, over which the show folks have no control, put a crimp in the theatre attendance for at least two days of the past week. Sunday is usually a "big" day in all houses, but along about seven in the evening one of those heavy tropical rains arrived and did a thirty minute act; just enough to spoil the evening attendance. Then Wednesday the cigarmakers staged a one day strike as a protest against the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti. They succeeded in closing all the theatres in the Latin section, and while the other houses did not close, still there was fear of trouble by many and the effect was felt quite materially at the box office.

"The Way Of All Flesh" opened the week at the Tampa, and it went over big, but as two of the four days' showing were "off"—the average for the run was just "good." "The Heart of Maryland" had the feature spot for the last half, and it did good. The Paramount News, with a stunt made here in Tampa, of Mabel Cody showing different styles of airplane changing, had something to do with the draw.

The Strand had a good lay out and it seemed to be only the "conditions" that kept the receipts down to "good." "Cheaters" opened, followed by "Beware of Widows," and "White Pants Willie" closed the week.

The Franklin kept up their average, with the exception of the two days mentioned. They had "Broncho Twister," "Paying the Price" and "Ace of Action."

After Midnight

Story Is Weak, But Treatment Is Strong

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE are a lot of good points in this picture—and a lot of bad ones, too. Monta Bell, who wrote and directed it, has done a creditable job with the megaphone, but his pen must have splotched up the paper. He tells us a story of a romance between a cigarette girl in a cabaret and a crook—and embroiders it with all the movieish twists—such as the harum-scarum sister of the heroine spending all the money that the cigarette girl has tried to save.

Of course such a romance as this could never happen—and that's why Mr. Bell should have treated it more satirically. Imagine a girl falling in love with a crook who threatens to hit her with a lead pipe unless she comes across with a ten spot! She exchanges the money for the pipe and hits the stick-up man with it. Thereafter develops a romance as she nurses him back to health. He strives to go straight but after some misunderstanding she takes her savings and splurges it all with her giddy sister. Which makes something of an anti-climax of the subsequent reconciliation.

The director has fashioned some interesting scenes from his material and sees to it that the incident is more or less original. Not so much can be said for his story. The film is what can be called just mildly entertaining.

The Cast: Norma Shearer, Gwen Lee, Lawrence Gray, Philip Sleeman, Eddie Sturgis. Director, Monta Bell.

THEME: Romantic drama of cabaret girl who reforms a crook and falls in love with him.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS:. The photographic effects. The cabaret scenes. The development of romance. The acting by Lawrence Gray.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Title affords all kinds of teaser possibilities. Make mention of star and her appearance as cabaret girl. Stage prologue to fit with cabaret atmosphere, etc.

DRAWING POWER: Star has big following. Well advertised film should draw. For average houses everywhere.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Length, seven reels. Released, August, 1927.

White Pants Willie

New Hines Comedy Has Lively Gags

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE is a plentiful supply of lively gags dished up in the new Johnny Hines comedy, most of which have an atmosphere of novelty about them. The fun—as in all of the comedian's pieces—is not concentrated in one reel or two, but extends throughout the entire footage. There is no celluloid fun-maker on the screen today who goes in for more gag play. And the best part of it is he puts it over.

The new effort is based upon that faithful comedy theme—getting away with murder. You see, Johnny is employed in a gas service station and affects white flannels. When he is fired he commandeers an elderly lady's limousine, hires a Chinese laundryman to drive it, and puts on the dog. He motors up to a swanky hotel and falls in love with the daughter of a rich promoter. The latter had previously become interested in the young man's invention—and eventually stakes him for a financial killing.

Before the denouement is effected Johnny has a merry time with the girl, the car and a polo pony. He doesn't know anything about the aristocratic game, but he picks it up quickly. The polo match is well gagged and releases the necessary laughs. There isn't so much originality in the idea (the Hines man has had more mirthful pieces) but it has smart action and incident.

The Cast: Johnny Hines, Leila Hyams, Walter Long, Henry Barrows, Ruth Dwyer, Margaret Seddon, George Kuwa. Director, Charles Hines.

THEME: Comedy of poor youth who represents himself as an aristocrat. Gets away with it and is humiliated, but wins love and recognition in the end.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Gags. Scene of banquet. Polo match. Ice-cream soda sequence. Love interest.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Be sure to tease title. Play up as snappy comedy of youth who puts himself over through force of his personality. Play up Leila Hyams.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for all types of houses. Title has "kick."

Produced by C. C. Burr. Distributed by First National. Length, 6,350 feet. Released, August, 1927.

Tumbling River

A Typical Mix with Thrills A-Plenty

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THERE is something about Tom Mix pictures that seems to differ just a trifle from those of other Western stars. While the stories are usually about the same, with the trusted ranch foreman the villainous cattle rustler, at the same time when a thrill is called for Tom puts it on pretty. And there are thrills galore in this one.

It seems just a matter of course for Tom and Tony to plunge over a steep embankment and both to come up uninjured. It is a trivial matter for Tom to lower himself out over the river and lasso the girl as she is about to be plunged to death with the villain, who is abducting her as they descend the rapids and near the falls. It is just an incident when the herd of horses being taken across the river by the rustlers become stampeded and each of the head plunges into the river and swims to safety.

The story is the usual one of the type. Dorothy Dwan, young and winning daughter of the rich rancher is a romantic miss with a penchant for getting into and being saved from serious situations. But she hadn't seen anything till Tom came into her life; then she was saved so often that it must have become monotonous to her. At any rate she liked it well enough to marry the hero, which made the story perfect.

The Cast: Tom Mix, Dorothy Dwan, William Conklin, Stella Essex, Elmo Billings, Edward Pell, Sr., Wallace MacDonald, Buster Gardner, Harry Gripp.

THEME: Western in which the hero outwits the villain, who is the trusted ranch foreman, and wins the daughter of the wealthy rancher.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The thrilling plunge over the cliff by Tom and Tony; the rescue of the girl in the swirling rapids; the stampede of the horses from the barge; the furious and daring riding.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: The star's name, of course is the best bet and you can promise more genuine thrills than usual. The all-around good work of the cast and a well told story.

Produced and distributed by Fox Films.
Length 4,675 feet. Released August 21st.

Shanghaied

Tensely Interesting Melodrama

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

PATSY RUTH MILLER and Ralph Ince put over this somewhat grewsome melodrama in such a capable manner that it is bound to win them wide praise. Miss Miller proves herself an actress of considerably more ability than she had probably been given credit for in the past. There is every opportunity for overacting in this type of melodrama, but to the credit of both Miss Miller and Ince be it said that they kept well within the bounds and made the story most convincing.

There is nothing elevating about this story of San Francisco's old Barbary Coast and the waterfront; nor was there anything elevating about that old famed, colorful and tough district of old San Francisco, but it was nevertheless a district that drew visitors from all over the world. The story shows much of that old color of the Barbary Coast dives, which flourished before Patsy Ruth was born, but she enacts her role almost to perfection and the picture is bound to have a wide appeal. A harrowing role for a girl of the type of Patsy Ruth, but she has never done one that gave her a better chance to display her acting ability.

The Cast: .Ralph Ince, Patsy Ruth Miller, Alan Brooks, Gertrude Astor, Walt Robbins, H. J. Jacobson.

THEME: Melodrama in which the dance hall girl is forced to be a party to the drugging of the sea captain, who in revenge shanghaies her and forces her to be ship scullery maid. She is transferred to another ship returning to San Francisco, where she is employed in the lowest dive. She saves her money, repays the captain and eventually weds him.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The splendid work of Miss Miller, Mr. Ince and the whole company. The scenes showing all the old color of San Francisco's Barbary Coast. The many tensely melodramatic situations.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up the accuracy of the scenes showing the Barbary Coast and its old dives: the work of Miss Miller and Mr. Ince.

DRAWING POWER: Will interest them in any house.

Produced and distributed by F B O.
Length 5,998 feet. Released October 19, 1927.

Clancy's Kosher Wedding

Its Gags Are Many But Ineffective

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

LAMBASTING, rough and tumble humor seems to be the idea here. If you don't succeed in producing a laugh the first time, try a second time, try innumerable times, and you are sure of eventually getting over at least a few chuckles. The trouble with "Clancy's Kosher Wedding" is that its gags are forced, its humor is so apparent the spectator cannot help but feel that desperate and frantic efforts are being extended to loosen his mouth into smiles. The gag sequences come rapidly but they often miss fire and sputter out.

The story tells of the fortunes of Cohen and Clancy, two rival clothing store merchants. They are deadly enemies but the former's daughter and the latter's son are very much in love with each other. Many arguments both voluble and fistic take place between the male heads of the two families, the climax arriving when Cohen stakes his store against Clancy's on the outcome of a prizefight. It is when Cohen is down and out, having lost his bet, that the Irishman realizes the fondness he has for him so they make up their differences and enter partnership. Of course the romance blossoms between their children and the fade-out is a happy one.

The Cast: George Sidney, Will Armstrong, Ann Brody, Mary Gordon, Sharon Lynn, Rex Lease, Ed Brady. Director, A. E. Gilstrom.

THEME: Irishman and Hebrew, business rivals, have many battles and unwittingly come to like each other. When the Celt wins his rival's store he relents, takes him into partnership. The two families are united by a marriage between the Irishman's son and the Hebrew's daughter.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The arguments between the two rival businessmen. The free-for-all at the picnic. The battle in the ring and the readjustment of Cohen's fortunes. The romance.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: See the press book for some appropriate ideas.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for patrons of the general run houses.

The Stolen Bride

Pretty Star and Tasty Settings—That's All

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A RATHER sugary offering is served up in "The Stolen Bride," which has a touch of Cinderella about it. The theme is based upon that trusty favorite—the high-born girl who is sold by her father to the highest bidder, though her heart belongs to another. It's a type of story that has proved very useful as a prop for musical comedies. It looks kind of old-fashioned in celluloid dress. The heroine falls in love with a poor but honest chap during her sojourn in America. When the irate parent learns about the affair he calls her back to her native Hungary. And the peasant follows—to be inducted into military service as an orderly for the villainous baron. The latter (if you must know) is the fiance of the heroine. It's his job to make things unpleasant for his servant.

The picture is dependable upon its romantic flourishings for appeal. And it provides Billie Dove with sufficient opportunity to bedeck herself in an array of finery. Her acting moments aren't so plentiful. Since she has demonstrated an emotional gift it's about time someone wrote her a story.

The film doesn't uncover any novelty of treatment. Situations which might develop dramatic possibilities are never taken advantage of—and as a result it often becomes incoherent. The sets indicate that Alexander Korda, the director, knows his Hungary.

The Cast: Billie Dove, Armand Kaliz, Lloyd Hughes, Lilyan Tashman, Frank Beal, Cleve Moore. Director, Alexander Korda.

THEME: Romantic drama of aristocratic girl who is sold by father to highest bidder. She has her own choice of a husband eventually.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The appeal of star. The costumes and settings. The treatment of romance. The love scenes. The photography.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up Billie Dove in her various costumes. Bill as effective romance of girl sold to highest bidder. Might tease title to provoke interest.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for average houses.

Produced and distributed by First National.
Length, six reels. Released, August, 1927.

Wings

The War In The Air Finely Picturized

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE'S an interesting war spectacle in treat for those who see "Wings." For the first time in cinema history the aviation branch of the service (as it operated during the late war) is presented. It makes for capital entertainment if one can overlook a story which lacks conviction. Our impression is that it could have been a great deal better had it carried a more substantial plot and had its characters appeared more genuine.

Several reels devoted to maneuvers of planes in the upper ozone tend to make it repetitious of action. Yet at the same time it packs a terrific wallop by the graphic depiction of the war in and above the clouds. It is spectacular in its appeal and the spectator should forget all about its weakly-built story and accept it as a frame for the projection of the airplane episodes.

It tells of two young aviators both of whom love the same girl. For the sake of dramatic purposes they quarrel over her. When one of them is brought down behind the German front he makes his escape in an enemy plane. His buddy goes searching for him and, spying the German plane, brings it down. In accomplishing the job he kills his friend. It is competently acted by Richard Arlen and Charles Rogers—with the former appearing more genuine in his role. Clara Bow as the principal heroine contributes a fair performance. A little less sophistication applied to her work would have made it more convincing.

The Cast: Clara Bow, Charles Rogers, Richard Arlen, El Brendel, Richard Tucker, Gary Cooper, Jobyna Ralston, "Gunboat" Smith, Arlette Marchal. Director, William Wellman.

THEME: Drama of war in the sky as depicted during World War. Battle scenes dovetailed with romance.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Spectacular appeal of air battles. Flight maneuvers. Color and atmosphere. Realism. Suspense. Acting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tie up with aviation outfits, etc. Exploit title to limit. Bill as first picture of its kind ever shown. Play up big.

DRAWING POWER: For high class houses everywhere. Title will draw.

The Phantom Buster

Buddy Roosevelt Wipes Out the Smugglers

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

WHEN it comes to thinking up something new for the plot of a Western, the producers know they are up against it. Practically every conceivable story twist has been made use of by this time so that often enough one sees the same story pattern employed in all sorts of Westerns, the only difference being that a different face enacts the role of hero. The story of this Roosevelt Western is nothing new but it is of the type that is not seen as regularly as some of its brothers.

It is kind of different to see two men who look exactly alike but who are nevertheless opposed to each other, for one is good and the other is bad. You have your doubts as to which of the two is the upright chap, but you have not long to wonder because of the heroine's repulsion of one whom you immediatly set down as a villain. This Western is decidedly different up to the point where the evil fellow is killed from ambush. After that unfortunate episide it tells the same old story of how wicked smugglers tried to kill the hero, of how he was nursed back to health through the devotedness of the girl, and of how he, well and strong again, subdued the villains, breaking up their gang and earning the sobriquet of "The Phantom Buster." It is too bad that the "twin" had to go out of the pictures as early as he did for his maneuvers were much more interesting, we confess, than the hero's, whose actions you could anticipate easily.

Buddy Roosevelt is good in his dual role and we believe that audiences viewing his latest release will walk out of the theatre content.

The Cast: Buddy Roosevelt, Alma Rayford, Charles Whitaker, Boris Karloff, John Junior, Howard Davies, Walter Maly, Lawrence Underwood. Directed by William Bertram.

THEME: Western action drama. Hero takes the place of his double, who is shot from ambush. By means of his impersonation, he learns many things and is instrumental in rounding up a gang of smugglers.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The "double" idea. Action and fighting.

DRAWING POWER: Okay for neighborhood and Western clientele.

Produced by Action Pictures, Inc. Distributed by Pathe. Released, August 14, 1927. Length, 4,497 feet.

The Patent Leather Kid

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT has taken Richard Barthelmess many seasons to get a good break on the screen. Not since "Tol'able David" has he had had anything to measure up to his histrionic stature. But with the appearance of "The Patent Leather Kid" the star is back in the select circle. It is a stirring war story—one which does not march off to the trenches until the second half of the picture.

The Rupert Hughes story of an East-Side prize-fighter with a patent leather complex—and whose idea of patriotism is to wave a towel instead of the flag—furnishes Barthelmess with a rich character sketch. He's a demon in the ring, but his conceit proves his undoing eventually. An Irish girl, ashamed of his lack of real fighting courage, goads him into becoming reckless.

The story is a trifle too long, but it is packed with humor, action and thrills. The fight sequences are rich in atmosphere and color—and none of the players step out of character. The war scenes merely serve as a background for the central figure. They reveal picturesque shots (especially the advance of the tanks) but the real punch of the picture is contained in the making over of the hero. The love interest kindles humor and pathos. Altogether it is an excellent film—one which tells its story with a spray of human episodes. There is some gifted acting turned in by Arthur Stone, Matthew Betz and Molly O'Day.

The Cast: Richard Barthelmess, Lawford Davidson, Matthew Betz, Arthur Stone, Raymond Turner, Walter James, Lucien Prival, Nigel de Brulier. Director, Al Santell.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The fight sequences. The human interest. The local color. Life-like characterizations. Acting. War episodes. Thrills, humor, action.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tell them it is there. Play up title, author and star. Bill as biggest picture Barthelmess ever had. Tie up with Legion, etc. Exploit Molly O'Day. Make a big spread with it.

DRAWING POWER: Sure to attract them. For first run houses everywhere.

Silk Stockings

Slim Story Long Drawn Out

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THE bane of most women's existence is a silk stocking with a run in it. This is that type of picture. Most of the trouble is caused when a young lady discards a damaged stocking by sticking it into the pocket of a young married man with a jealous wife. The story has a decided run in it. Had it been made a two-reeler there might have been sufficient action to keep it going at a fairly rapid pace.

Laura La Plante is the star and the director gave her ample scope to display a lot of facial expressions, which she does passably in the long-drawn-out court room scene. However, in so doing the action halts completely to the detriment of the picture. The entire cast with Miss La Plante is guilty of overacting.

The screen story was made from the stage play "A Pair of Silk Stockings," which undoubtedly was better in its original form. Much of the speed of the original farce was lost in its transposition to the screen. It necessarily lacks the snappy lines that helped to make the stage play a success, and as a consequence it drags painfully most of the way.

The Cast: Laura La Plante, John Harron, William Austin, Otis Harlan, Burr McIntosh, Heinie Conklin, Marcella Daly, Tempe Pigot, Ruth Cherrington. Directed by William Serter.

THEME: A farce in which the young couple, very much in love, is led to the divorce court when a young lady playfully slips her damaged silk stocking into the husband's pocket. The wrong is righted after much confusion when the wife deliberately compromises herself with the husband, thus nullifying the interlocutory degree.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: None of any importance.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: A tieup with a hosiery concern; the use of the title of the stage play from which the picture was made might help some.

DRAWING POWER: There is little to recommend in the picture, though it might be appreciated in some of the neighborhood houses.

Produced and distributed by Universal Pictures. Length, 5,947 feet. Released, October 2nd, 1927.

The World at Her Feet

Too Light a Yarn For a Talented Star

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

AN adaptation of the play, "Lawyer Bolbec and Her Husband," by Georges Berr and Louis Verneuil, this comedy of marital difficulties featuring the gifted Florence Vidor is a light inconsequential affair insofar as plot is concerned. The old story of the lonely wife and straying hubby—how often has it been and will continue to be used as the mainstay of some vehicle presenting the countenance of a star? Here is a case, though, of old wine being served in a somewhat new bottle. Luther Reed has made sure that the developments run smoothly and sparklingly, that all of his incidents are welded together with delicate subtlety and finesse. Even when the events have stopped developing, when the piece is coasting, so to speak, he has the comedy bubbles effervescing, that the camera has a chance to drink in the beauty and charming personality of the patrician Florence Vidor. Of course, there are faults here and there (for instance it is a little risque in spots) but they do not loom largely, and, we are sure, can be lightly dismissed. The director steered the marriage boat up the river of light humor, avoiding the tributaries of over-emphasis and seriousness. The result is: a pleasant little comedy.

The cast does excellent acting.

The Cast: Florence Vidor, Arnold Kent, Margaret Quimby, Richard Tucker, William Austin, David Torrence. Director, Luther Reed.

THEME: Wife's ambition to "Have the world at her feet" so irritates her spouse that he decides to concentrate on his interest in the feminine elsewhere. His wife, alarmed, resorts to womanish wiles and wins back her man.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Intrigues and scenes where both husband and wife are placed in compromising positions.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up star. Mention her role in "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter." Bill as comedy of married life.

DRAWING POWER: Good.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Released May, 1927. Footage, 5,691 feet.

Service for Ladies

Entertaining Romance—Capitally Staged and Acted

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE Menjou pictures are picking up. His "Service for Ladies," is entitled to the same recognition as "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter,"—which is saying a mouthful. It carries a deal of romantic charm and tells its story without waxing unduly dramatic. Furthermore it is staged against appropriate atmosphere while the acting is always natural.

It tells the story of a head-waiter of Paris (who is intimately acquainted with kings and princes) and his love for a New York debutante. He follows her to the Alps and a passionate affair springs up between them. But once he realizes his station in life, he checks out the romance. The girl, however, places another interpretation on his departure. She considers him above her inasmuch as she has seen him with a humble king. The situation is well worked out and never becomes movieish. Indeed, there is a deep touch of pathos behind the effort of the waiter to find romance and still be himself.

The picture carries a Continental flavor in its settings, the Alps sequences being well suggested. Moreover none of the scenes are forced to be bolstered up with smart titles. What is written into them serves to provide emphasis to the action. Menjou acts in his customary suave manner, conducting himself in the proper deportment of a head-waiter who knows how to establish a clientele. Kathryn Carver as the leading woman brings charm and bearing to the role. Lawrence Grant's king is humble and human.

The Cast: Adolphe Menjou, Kathryn Carver, Lawrence Grant, Charles Lane. Director, Harry D'Arrast.

THEME: Romantic drama of social barrier with head-waiter falling in love with debutante.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Treatment of romance. Human appeal. Color and atmosphere. Settings. Easy acting by star. Titles.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Bill as a typical Menjou picture. Play up title—it can stand teaser campaign. Bill as appealing romance.

DRAWING POWER: Should go well wherever star is popular. For better class houses.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, six reels. Released, August, 1927.

How to Determine Burning Time of Various Carbon Combinations

IN response to a number of requests from projectionists for information concerning the burning time of certain carbon combinations, we have gone to the trouble of gathering the necessary data and have arranged it in the form of a table as shown below.

The table as here presented shows the burning time of various length of trim with the several carbon combinations used for the low intensity arc, the mirror arc, the High Intensity lamp and the alternating current arc.

This information is valuable in that it should enable the projectionist to determine in advance, and with a fair degree of accuracy, at what periods in the schedule it will be necessary for him to retrim the various lamps under his care so that he will not be caught napping. It should also go a long way toward relieving him of anxiety over the probable burning time of a doubtful trim which he thinks will not be sufficient to last out.

How to Read Table

At the extreme left of the table are given the various combinations of carbons commonly used with the different arcs. Immediately to the right of this are two columns showing the current in amperes and the voltage as used with the respective arc sets and from which the burning time was obtained by actual test.

The top heading, "Length of Carbon Trim," refers to the total length of carbon (including both positive and negative) as measured between the two carbon jaws. Of course, all this carbon length is not burnable; that is, the entire carbon length so measured cannot be considered as being available for use since an allowance must be made for protection of the jaws from the heat of the arc. The table is so worked out, however, that this allowance is automatically taken care of so that with any given trim, as measured in the manner described above, the burnable length will be as indicated in the table.

With the exception of the high intensity arc, all the types of arcs mentioned in the table have their carbon trims measured between the two carbon jaws as above described. The two carbons which compose the set (positive and negative) burn fairly equally in each of these arcs so that both carbons will be exhausted at approximately the same time.

In the high intensity lamp, however, the positive carbon burns away from the negative and, indeed, one trim of the 9-inch negative will outlast the entire 20-inch positive length so that the length of the positive will determine the length of the trim with this arc. Consequently, with the high intensity lamp the length of their trim represents that carbon length as measured from the crater end of positive to the point where the positive is gripped to make it feed through the positive holder.

The principal body of the table shows the burning time of the various carbon sets. The figures show the burning time in hours and minutes, so that a reading of, say, 0-28 would mean "no hours, 28 minutes," and a reading of 2-44 would mean "two hours and forty-four minutes."

EXAMPLE: A projectionist operating a spotlamp in the projection room has to cover a vaudeville bill lasting one hour and fifteen minutes and he wishes to know whether one trimming of the arc will last for the entire show. He is using 60 amperes D. C. and a carbon set made up of a ¾-inch-12 inches positive and 11/32-inch by 6-inches negative. The distance between carbon jaws, when separated to their widest distance, is found to be 10 inches. How long will one trim last under these conditions?

SOLUTION: Select the indicated carbon combination under the heading "Low Intensity" and read to the right until the figure "10" is reached, under the heading "Length of Carbon Trim." The reading "1-20" thus found will show that one setting of the carbons under these conditions will last one hour and twenty minutes.

CAUTION: The figures given in this table were obtained with precise current adjustments on the various arcs so that in order to duplicate them in practice, similar accuracy as to current and carbon conditions must be adhered to. A higher or lower current than that indicated in the table will give correspondingly different results and will destroy the value of the burning figures given. Check the current carefully.

Comerford To Build New House on Jersey Shore

Announcement was made on August 8 of plans for the erection of a large, modern motion picture theatre in the borough of Jersey Shore, near Williamsport, Pa., by the Comerford Amusement Company, of Scranton, in cooperation with the J. G. Meyer Amusement Company, composed of investors residing in Jersey Shore and vicinity.

It has been the policy of the Comerford interests, which control over one hundred theatres in the United States, but chiefly in Pennsylvania, in many instances to associate themselves with local investors in promoting the erection of new theatres and the plans for the Jersey Shore enterprise are in accord with this policy.

The building will be erected on the Allegheny street site of the old Young Building, recently destroyed by fire. Among the modern devices to be installed will be the Vitaphone for the synchronization of both speech and music with the action on the screen. It is proposed to have the new theatre completed next year.

Ackerman and Harris Open New San Franciso Theatre

LIKE a Moorish palace, the Avenue Theatre, San Francisco's newest and luxurious neighborhood playhouse, was formally presented to the people of San Bruno district, Wednesday evening, July 20th at 6 o'clock. Purely as a work of beauty, this structure is held unsurpassed in the annals of theatrical architecture. Like a piece of fine jewelry, studded with gorgeous gems and shining with their lustre, the Avenue Theatre forms another diamond in a necklace of new theatres rapidly being established in San Francisco's great home districts by Ackerman & Harris. Situated on San Bruno Avenue, between Burrows and Bacon Streets, the theatre not only beautifies the region but gives a marked impetus to its commercial growth.

The Avenue is of Spanish Gothic architecture. The front of the building is centered by a gracefully arched entrance. On each side of the arch and above it are three miniature balconies, six in all. Four turrets lend a finish that gives the exterior of the building the atmosphere of a Moorish castle during the medieval ages. A large dome, 60 feet in diameter, rises gracefully from the center of the building and from this dome, in the interior, is hung a beautiful ornamented chandelier, reversed so that reflected light is cast on the artistically decorated ceiling of the auditorium below. The theatre is of the popular stadium type. There are no balconies, but a rising elevation to the rear of the auditorium provides for greatly increased seating capacity, making the screen and stage thoroughly visible without the slightest obstruction from every seat in the house. The building is of class A steel and concrete, the entire property measuring 250 by 1,500 feet. Exclusive of its land values the structure cost $220,000 to create. Included with the building are 7 stores including a large market.

The structural equipment of the Avenue Theatre includes an outer vestibule, inner foyer, men's lounging rooms, ladies' rest rooms, managerial offices, a stage and an elaborate system of heating and ventilating. Projectors and other equipment for the presentation of feature pictures were installed by the National Theatre Supply Co., while the seating of the theatre was handled by the Heywood Wakefield Company. The huge organ was installed by the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company. The marquee was built by the Brumfield Electric Sign Co., which also installed all electrical signs, while the painting and decoration were done by the American Painting and Decorating Co. Electrical wiring was handled by the T. & T. Electric Co. The Avenue Theatre will maintain a policy of presenting the pick of the season's feature pictures accompanied with special musical programs.

Marr & Colton Enlarge New York Offices

Every year for the past ten years, the Marr and Colton Company, builders of pipe organs for theatres and churches, have found it necessary to enlarge in factory space, buildings, staffs and offices.

The increased business from New York office makes it necessary to take larger quarters. After August 1st., the New York Office will be located in a suite of offices in the Paramount Building, Times Square, New York. Mr. Lee Heerwagen, our genial sales manager, is in charge of the New York Office.

Loew Providence Site Now Being Cleared

The site on Weybosset and other streets, Providence, recently purchased, is now being cleared and present buildings torn down. On it will be erected the new $1,200,000 theatre for the Marcus Loew Circuit and it will take about a year to complete the structure, which will be the largest theatre in Providence. At one time part of the site was occupied by the old Gaiety Theatre.

Jasper, Ga., to Have New Theatre

A new theatre with a seating capacity of 275 will soon be opened in Jasper, Ga., by Paul Stancil. It will be called the Lyric, and is to have a stage adequate for road shows. The policy provides for pictures twice a week.

"College" — United Artists, San Francisco

latest comedy and by all odds his best. Safe to prophesy success for Keaton's second United Artists picture. Civilized comedy, all of its laughs, and there are countless hearty ones, legitimately gained. Laughs sound and satisfactory, built on situations that are sane and universally appealing. Riotously funny without assistance of single custard pie."

News: "Buster's attempts to imitate high-powered 'soda jerker' furnish one of comedy's high spots. Bewilderment in baseball game and efforts to fit into track team also bring steady accompaniment of laughs."

Call: "Embodiment of humor; ultimate in comedy. Keaton has achieved not only best of many laugh hits but of college comedies. Contains universe of laughs and infinity of wit."

Bulletin: "Best Keaton has ever made. Substitutes humor for heroics with prodigious success. Sends audience into hysteria."

Examiner: "Happens to be best of Keaton's comedies. . . . A success. . . . Narrative has more briskness than anything he has ever appeared in. Simplicity and abundance of gags go off like string of firecrackers."

"College"—United Artists, Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles

L. A. Evening Herald: "You'll roar plenty over the evolution of a Buster from a high school grind into a glorified Charlie Hoff. . . . It is hard to quit laughing unless you quit looking at the screen, and you can't want to quit looking."

Louella Parsons in The L. A. Examiner: "There were many who craved Mr. Keaton yesterday for I had difficulty finding a seat at the Metropolitan Theatre where 'College' is on exhibition. Mr. Keaton needed inly to drag himself into view to get a laugh. . . .The incidents are really funny."

L. A. Evening Express: "The picture exudes a continuous, happy atmosphere. The gags come frequently and are original. When Buster throws his hammer audiences approach throwing a fit."

L. A. Evening Record: "A surefire gloom chaser! . . . A picture of continuous laughs with all kinds of woe happening to Buster. . . . It is one in which the laughs and gags are closely packed, with the most made out of all the footage."

"Judgment of the Hills"—F B O, Hippodrome Theatre, New York City

World: "It does play itself in so faithful, so ingenious a fashion that it represents at once best new screen play of current week and by all odds most respectable exhibit which F B O has turned out to date. Frankie Darro gives remarkable portrayal, moving, honest and unaffected, while elder brother, acted by Orville Caldwell, is done with strength and repression and surprising minimum of customary Hollywoodian madness. A satisfying and creditable screen drama."

Herald - Tribune: "Mountain story well directed and two parts played in excellent understanding. Young actor (Darro) admirably sincere and moving, and Caldwell plays mountain ne'er-do-well splendidly. Is agreeably devoid of usual mountain hokum, and there is air of genuineness about atmosphere. Meehan has done competent directorial job."

Morning Telegraph: "Speaking of motion picture genius, what about Leo Meehan? He is boy who bats out little gems of pictures like 'Judgment of the Hills' which are given to exhibitors by F B O to enable them to stay in business. As sweet a bit of cinema as New York has seen. Shots superb in pictorial composition and pastoral beauty. Sustained suspense and climax which are thrillingly enthralling and carry utter conviction. Were I production chief of some company plagued with the necessity to economize, I believe I would send each of my directors a picture of this tousle-headed Irishman, Meehan, as a gentle reminder of what can be done in picture business. 'Judgment of the Hills' weighed in balance and found golden."

Daily News: "Frankie Darro, as kid brother, walks off with honors."

American: "Frankie Darro, boy for whom picture was made, gives excellent performance. Child's eyes as lovely and appealing as Jackie Coogan's, and he uses them unconsciously and therfore to advantage. Mr. Caldwell makes convincing strong man and contributes much to picture's sincerity."

Mirror: "This infant prodigy shows flair for dramatics which promises to place his name in spotlights."

Telegram: "Excellent acting and skilled direction."

Journal: "Youngster (Darro) does good work and Caldwell gives convincing performance."

Evening World: "Kind of story which movie fans country over will fork over their money to see."

"Wings"—Paramount, Criterion Theatre, New York City

Evening World: "How Paramount has succeeded in making some of thrilling battle scenes in air makes little or no difference—they are thrilling and realistic."

World: "'Wings' flew into Criterion—riding on breeze of effusive ballyho, and justified virtually all praise makers have given it. Never has screen in this country shown such spectacle of aviation. Audience broke into spontaneous applause at thrill of sheer spectacle. Doubtless will have long run on Broadway."

Photoplay Magazine: "Great war spectacle of air. Thrilling airplane fights and maneuvers in and above clouds. By all means see 'Wings.'"

Evening Post: "'Wings' will probably be tremendously popular. Aerial sequences of unflagging and breath-taking interest."

Telegram: "Sky level of war, it is now proved, held several thousand thrills and lot of excellent drama. Excellent and thrilling stuff. Battles in sky beautifully photographed and produce fully as much tense excitement as muddy struggles of 'The Big Parade.' Playwright Owen Davis considers final flying scene in which Charles Rogers, not knowing that his buddy is in stolen German plane, drives him to death on ground, 'the most gripping scene in dramatic history.' Quite number of our neighbors wept copiously during episode, so scene was undeniably effective."

Evening Sun: "Airplanes zooming through cloud banks, falling, twisting their way across enlarged screen covering—proscenium space of Criterion—these are drama and core of 'Wings,' which was shown to plane-crazed world last evening. Film represents first attempt at using planes as motif, and naturally 'Wings' is most thrilling when audience is transported to etherized spaces up where blue begins."

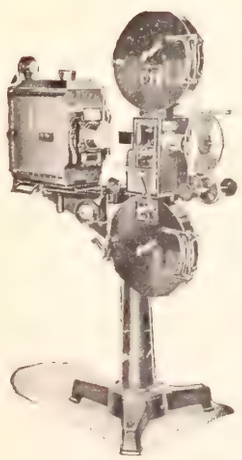
Times: "Amazing air duels and impressive study of aviators depicted gives unforgettable idea of existence of these daring fighters—how they were called upon at all hours of day and night to soar into sky and give battle to enemy planes."

Graphic: "'Wings,' packing all thrills of great adventure, romancing facts more exciting than fiction, retelling story which screen has told so often, came into Criterion and before first-night audience had left theatre box-office reported sell out for all next week. 'Wings' will be big success, not only because now is appropriate time for aviation picture, but because extravagant advance notices were no exaggerations."

Evening Journal: "'Wings' impressive spectacle. Airplane sequences—squadrons in formation, battles in air, planes crashing down like comets of fire; war fought over again, exploding shells, lumbering tanks, barbed wire, fire, destruction—all these scenes thrillingly vivid. War and airplane scene tremendous."

Herald-Tribune: "Some brilliant scenes of aerial combat in 'Wings.' In it, too, enormously helpful use of this new device called Magnascope."

Now investigate
Incandescent Lamp Projection



THE economy of incandescent lamp projection is well known to the industry. It is directly responsible for the success of hundreds of medium size theatres throughout the country where low operating costs are of paramount importance.

And it has many other advantages. The light source is steady and does not vary in intensity. Pictures are, therefore, free from flicker, shadows and unevenly distributed light. These features are always appreciated by the audience.

Projectionists favor incandescent lamp projection not only because it makes a good screen presentation but also because it improves operating conditions. There's no dust or fumes or excess heat from an incandescent lamp and once adjusted it requires very little attention.

It is, therefore, only a matter of good business to investigate the merits of this method of projection and to find out if it is adaptable to your theatre. As a rule it can be used profitably in any theatre where the throw does not exceed 120 feet. Often it gives satisfactory results over longer ranges.

Very little extra equipment is required and the saving it effects soon pays all installation costs.

"paramount news is so far ahead of all others I have seen that there is no comparison!"

T. W. McKay, Strand Theatre, Rutland, Vt.

¶ We said these changing times demanded a new and greater news reel. We said Paramount News was it. Now the actuality proves it — on the screen. Don't take our word for it. Read the enthusiastic comments of lucky showmen who have played it from its first issue, August 1st. We've a barrel more of wires and letters even more flattering. Nation-wide praise for Paramount's daring step that has "put the news reel ten years ahead of where it was." ¶ Screen the current issue of Paramount News for yourself. You'll catch the difference from other news reel at once. Events flashed on the screen before the newspaper headlines dry. All previous standards of speed beaten a mile. The whole world combed by a mammoth camera staff, as only Paramount can. Crisp, modern headlines. Breezy tempo. The news reel of these swift, breathless times. Paramount News. "Eyes of a new world." Twice weekly. 1927's public demands it.

exhibitors hail the new and greater news reel!

Mr. McKay's letter in full:

¶ "My hearty congratulations on your first release of Paramount News, which we are playing today. This news reel is so far ahead of all others I have seen that there is no comparison.

¶ "Comments from audiences are the greatest ever received from a production in this house. There is no question in my mind but that Paramount News now tops all other news reels."

Mr. E. R. Rogers of Chattanooga, Tenn., wires:

¶ "The news reel takes on a new and significant meaning with the advent of Paramount News. We marveled at the showmanship displayed in its construction, at the excellent photography, at the clever titles and sequences. When we received scenes of Bobby Jones' arrival in Atlanta Sunday for showing Monday, off went our hats again to Paramount News."

"Fastest service ever," says Mr. Edward Johnson, president California Theatre Co.

¶ "Paramount News service best ever. Subway bomb explosion received here Sunday—fastest service ever received from the East. Paramount should be congratulated on Editor Emanuel Cohen."

"Paramount News best," wires Mr. Mike Glynne, Long Island exhibitor:

¶ "Paramount News best news reel we have shown in my theatres this year. Congratulations to the staff."

Mr. A. C. Gortatowsky, Atlanta, Ga., showman, expresses enthusiasm:

¶ "Ran first issue Paramount News yesterday and Monday. It's a cracking good news picture. Much success with it."

Mr. Will H. Hays writes Editor Emanuel Cohen:

¶ "I was very much pleased to see the first issue of the Paramount news reel. It was a splendid one and I want to send you a word of congratulation and best wishes."

"Didn't realize there could be so much difference," Mr. C. T. Perrin, Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Col., writes:

¶ "The first issue of Paramount News is about the best news reel I have ever had the pleasure of seeing. I didn't realize there could be so much difference in the subject.

¶ "I want to mention particularly the titles—how much easier to read and to remember than in any other news reel. Everyone in the audience thought it was great."

Mr. Exhibitor C. B. Grimes, of Tuscaloosa, Ala., sends congratulations:

¶ "My compliments on Paramount News. The service from Atlanta was par-excellent. Showing picture today on Bobby Jones' welcome in Atlanta yesterday afternoon. Congratulations to Paramount."

"Went over great," enthuses Mr. S. Dannenberg, Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.

¶ "Paramount News went over great. You are to be particularly commended for the speed with which you got Bobby Jones' arrival in Atlanta on our screen. Best wishes for a world of success."

The Yardstick

"To Build For, Attain and Hold Public Good Will"

By William A. Johnston

I HEARD, last week, from a man who contacts this business in a large, practical and intimate way, a caustic and canny appraisal of its present status.

He hit right and left with amazing accuracy, sparing few individuals, few policies and few institutions.

Yet he believes sturdily in the industry's intrinsic worth and future—that its future stability will, somehow, be had; and his concluding words furnish the best, in fact the only, yardstick to define and assure future stability.

He said, in conclusion; "To build for, and attain and hold the public good will."

* * * *

Here's the yardstick:

Pictures—made, in every instance, with one thought uppermost; namely, to build the public good will.

Theatres—so built, and operated and, if necessary, merged, to the end of meeting and holding the public good will.

Publicity—of such a volume and such a character as to mould and maintain for the motion picture and all its institutions, the public good will.

And finally, men—men big enough, broad enough, wise enough, to put these policies into solid effect.

There's no future for this business except a future built upon public good will.

The days when this was a show business only, a business where show success counted only, whatever the result, have long since passed. The motion picture belongs to the public, not merely to the motion picture business.

And also the days have passed when producing, distributing and theatre interests belonged to motion picture men. They now belong to a very considerable degree, to some 60,000 public shareholders.

The motion picture industry, in short, has completely outgrown its early provincialism. And the day's crying need is for policies broad enough to meet its broad responsibilities.

* * * *

The rotten sport within this business is opportunism.

Opportunism builds for today and says "To hell with tomorrow."

Opportunism puts the individual ahead of his firm.

Opportunism puts individual interests ahead of the industry's own welfare.

Opportunism preaches the destructive doctrine: "Get yours while the going is good."

Opportunism breeds rotten politics and prodigal waste.

Opportunism is bad enough within the business, since it fairly recognizes neither a firm's welfare nor the whole industry's welfare; but worse still is its broader effect upon the public relation of the motion picture, which it recognizes not at all.

Trade deals, policies and practices not built upon public good will must go. They will go sooner or later.

But the need is solemn and immediate for men who will hasten their departure.

Lassie Lou Ahern is "Little Harry" in Universal's "Uncle Tom's Cabin." And her hobby is listening to bedtime stories over the radio and then repeating them to her dolly

Dorothy Gulliver, Universal featured player all dressed up for Labor Day. She's making "The Shield of Honor," now

Al Rockett, west coast production manager for first National and Richard Barthelmess, star of "The Patent Leather Kid" both came to New York for the world premiere at the Globe. Dick met Al on the latter's arrival

. . . and the other reason for running this cut is that the Summer season is nearly over. She's Ethlyne Clair of Universal

Inside Slants on the Industry

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

IS the public getting weary of motion pictures? Of poor pictures, yes; the public wearied of them some time ago. Of good pictures—emphatically, no.

The proof of this is located about a block from the typewriter upon which we are pounding out this item—the Roxy theatre, and the picture is "What Price Glory."

In the seven days, August 13-19, "What Price Glory" piled up the amazing gross of $144,267, a world's record, an absolutely new mark in theatrical history.

And in August—the favorite vacation month; and in a week in which there were no holidays; just favorable weather—and a fine picture!

THE Roxy record on this picture is unanswerable evidence that the public will pay money—and a whole lot of it—for real stuff on the sceen. The end is not yet. The picture is held over for a second week and will go into the third.

FURTHERMORE—and just as importantly—the surrounding program for the "What Price Glory" engagement builds up to the picture. A fine prologue is presented; but handled in such a manner that the total show-effect is heightened. "Roxy" does not introduce a lot of flashy presentation stuff that has no connection with the film.

Give 'em a fine picture, properly presented, and they'll come in crowds to see it. Sounds simple enough, but it is not done as often as it might be—or should be.

SPEAKING of surroundings and atmosphere, give a thought to the atmospheric theatre, whose leading exponent and creator is John Eberson.

Some months ago, Motion Picture News devoted a Buyers' Guide issue to Mr. Eberson's atmospheric theatres, with illustrations in color. This issue literally went 'round the world, and brought inquiries from many countries. It helped to establish Eberson's splendid new idea in the show world.

Now, Mr. Eberson has gone very far with his conception of the atmospheric theatre. A town's own setting should determine the kind of theatre to be built, he points out.

For example, an Egyptian theatre would be out of place in many towns, though the number of "Egyptians" seems to be increasing, without regard to their local settings.

It is Mr. Eberson's thought—and he is right—that the particular kind of atmosphere chosen for the house should suit the locale. When it does, the show-value of the theatre is greatly increased, and it becomes also a valuable architectural addition to the town.

A WELL-KNOWN producer-director has made several expensive box-office "flops" in a row. At the same time, he is reported to be half a million dollars richer than he was before he produced the "flops." Some of this money was made by business deals outside actual picture-making; most of it wasn't. But all of it came to him because of his association with the industry.

This is the only business in the world, we believe, where a thing like this could happen. Whether the record of box-office failures is entirely the producer-director's fault, we don't know. But we do know that it is silly to talk about putting the industry on an economic basis when things of this sort continue.

WHEN the film history of 1927 comes to be written, a good deal of attention will doubtless be paid to the booking slump, with an interesting sidelight or two on "protection."

To go back for a moment, it will be remembered that the sales plans, worked out by agreement, held the drive for new product to a deadline, with all the major companies getting away to an even start. The conventions were staged in the same month, and then the onslaught on the exhibitor began.

But the exhibitor held out; to a large extent he is still holding out, and the sales drive is now nearly three months old. The net results, to date, are in the main that the big circuits are commencing to book, but at a heavy concession.

Distributors, eager for contracts which were not forthcoming as expected, were asked by the circuits for protection concessions unheard of before. The circuits got them in some cases; in others the situations are still balled up. The Hays office, for the first time, was brought into the picture-selling situation, and Charles C. Pettijohn went to Los Angeles to mediate in the dispute there between the West Coast Theatres, seeking greater protection than before and the smaller exhibitors.

In St. Louis, the fight grows warm and the exhibitor organization has gone on record as opposed to any kind of unreasonable protection for any type of house.

Until the zoning system is settled, the independent theatres are refusing to sign for new pictures.

Further than this, it was disclosed at one of the exhibitors' executive sessions, which was attended also by distributor representatives, that some of the film companies have not placed a single contract for the new season in St. Louis.

ANNOUNCEMENTS by leading companies of bookings currently being made usually name circuits as the buyers. Suppression of picture information, by agreement, and the rush for bookings by distributors gave the circuits their opportunity to make protection figure heavily in the buyer-seller situation.

This is not healthy at all, for the reason that picture values are not, but they should be, the main item in the bargaining. Of course, they are not, simply because the distributors shortsightedly, and mistakenly, failed to give service information on the new product. In other words, they did not create the demand properly, but relied upon salesmen, without sufficient advertising backing, to rush out and get the contracts.

With the result, among other things, that they let themselves in for a "protection" war with the circuits, and, in other ways, gummed up the distribution machinery.

It will all have to be straightened out, and undoubtedly it will be.

THE "star replacement" plan, by which high-salaried stars were to be replaced by new faces, is denied by heads of studios on the Coast, who are reported to regard it as "foolish and futile."

And so it would be. The replacing of stars is attended to by the public; also the placing of stars on the screen. There have been many instances, over a period of years, when producers attempted to make stars but the public would not have them, so they weren't stars.

In the same manner, it would be impossible to dispense with the services of established stars, always provided that they are in great public favor. Some of them may be getting too much money. If they are, the pyramiding of star salaries by competition among producers themselves is at the bottom of the situation.

But—the important thing to remember is that the public decides, in this vital matter, as in all vital matters affecting the industry.

If the industry keeps that simple fact in mind, and governs itself accordingly, it can well afford to forget a lot of other things which seem to be important, but are not.

A DRASTIC condemnation of overdoing presentation, and playing up band shows and other acts at the expense of the picture, was contained in a recent editorial in the St. Louis Times. The article was by a special writer and appeared in the editorial news column featured on the second page of the paper.

It was headed "The Play is Not the Thing," and continued in part: "The picture is now the least important feature of the big picture houses. As a rule, when the formerly impressive announcemnt of the 'presentation' flashes on the screen, the audience relaxes in its seat and wonders how long it will be before the other stuff is resumed.

"There is not a large picture theatre in America that could survive on the 'presentation,' if unaccompanied. A good example of the decadence of the film story is to be found at the . . . theatre this week." Then follows a roast of the picture, which says among other things:

"The story contains not one hint of information, entertainment, amusement or instruction. . . . The tale is tenuous to the snapping point and if the audience got anything out of it more than a forty-minute nap, it is not of record."

This is an interesting newspaper reaction to presentation stuff. The writer evidently went into the theatre expecting to see pictures, instead of which he saw a flood of presentation and, when the picture arrived, it was poor.

ALONG this same line, James R. Grainger, Fox general sales manager, characterizes the overdoing of presentation as "a dangerous nuisance." His views were given in an interview published in Greater Amusements and follow in part:

"For the past seven weeks I have been traveling over the entire country and those nights when I was not riding on trains I have been watching business in the large theatres in the key cities and from this observation I am thoroughly convinced that the public is getting well fed-up on this so-called presentation, which, after all, consists of nothing but a series of vaudeville acts, magnified and dressed up a trifle.

"Some of the presentations I have seen in the de luxe houses were not suited to play vaudeville houses at ten and twenty cents.

"If more time were expended by organizations and their management in properly exploiting pictures their receipts would greatly increase and their expenses would decrease proportionately. Of course, there may be three or four houses in the country where presentation is of real importance to balance up their programs, but beyond these it is a dangerous nuisance."

ANOTHER point brought out by Mr. Grainger was this: "Houses playing big, tiresome presentations must depend on being able to keep up this evil by buying films at cheap prices.

"If motion picture producers are chumps enough to sell their product cheap in order to enable certain managers and organizations to maintain their egotism, they can be considered very poor business men."

TRICKLING in from the Coast are reports that one of the most famous of producer-directors has not been able to get started on a single picture, though he has been waiting several months to do so. He has been ready to begin on no less than four different productions, but indications are that he will have to wait another month before beginning, although he has been ready for many weeks.

The production executives don't seem to be able to decide what they want him to do. Meanwhile, the overhead, including player salaries, is piling up.

The producer-director is reported to be discouraged with the many postponements. But he is under contract, so all he can do is wait until the executives make up their minds, if and when they do.

ANOTHER director has recently been displaced in favor of a megaphone wielder from Europe and has gone back to the company from which he was borrowed, but has no assignment as yet.

The foreign director was brought over last year and put on salary at another studio, but he has yet to make a picture in Hollywood.

Director No. 1, together with four stars and featured players, drew salary for months, but the script is still up in the air. The producer and this director, it is said, could not agree on the story. Whether the producer and the foreign director will be able to agree remains to be seen. But the overhead, of course, goes right on—and on—and on.

Film Reviews in the New York Newspapers Fall Far Short of What They Should Be, With a Few Exceptions---Some Ideas Toward Solving the Problem of Genuine Criticism

WHEN first I became a critic all of us sat on the chairs, piano and floor of a projection room in a Broadway theatre every Friday noon and made smart cracks (or so we thought them) about the titles, actors and (especially) the producer. Through all the babble, Hall of the Times, who takes his job seriously, vainly tried to make notes. Martin of The World rarely or never came, preferring to see films in the theatre. Ted Shane of The New Yorker was my idea of a witty fellow in those days. Louella Parsons, through seniority, was queen of the May. Then I did not know, but in retrospect it seems to have been cheap, unfair and rather stupid. I think we wrote for one another and patted each other on the back for smart lines and pithy sallies.

Some poor boob had laid out $250,000 to make a picture; this was his break from New York papers reaching six million people.

IV.

Reporters and Critics

As a general thing, good reporters do not make good analytical critics, and the same is true conversely. The duties should devolve on different writers, as they now do on The Sun and The Morning Telegraph; and as they do in every newspaper dramatic department in New York City except those of The Post and The Graphic. A critic should not know stars and directors intimately, because thereby he must be influenced unconsciously,—if not consciously, as is manifest in some cases,—by the friendship. Of course, a reporter should know them all . . . which is doubtless why the New York papers assigned to the Valentino and Chaplin news stories reporters who would not have known either gentleman in private dress had he hit them in the eye.

Now. Why is it that the drama, which does not attract in two months to thirty theatres so many New Yorkers as films lure to ten theatres in a single week, and whose sponsors do not advertise so extensively as film companies and theatres now do, should in every instance have a newspaper department of two, three or four men reporting its activities, while films have one,—who is both critic and reporter? It is because that which has been done these many years still is being done. It's a bad hangover. Even the circulation-boosting demise of Rudolph Valentino last August did not wallop managing editors in the eye with the news in movies. Nor does the fact that 2,300,000 fan magazines are sold every month to readers of their newspapers mean anything to New York newspaper publishers. Still, the same data is available to daily papers.

One might be catty and cite specific cases of this or that reporter-critic's obvious bitterness against a star, actor or director, as registered in reviews and traceable for origin and first cause to previous columns written by that reporter-critic. This lamentable condition reflects only on the petty-mindedness of certain reviewers, mostly women; but if managing editors had reporters AND critics for motion picture pages the condition could and would not arise. So long as critics have to come into daily contact with picture folk in the course of their reporting those meetings will be mirrored in reviews.

Leonardo Illustrates

It is exactly as though Thomas Craven, art critic of The American Mercury, in his hypothetically dual capacity of reporter, visited the galleries to gather news items and at the Anderson Galleries had run across Leonardo da Vinci. Perhaps Leonardo might have told Craven:

"It's none of your damned business, old timer, what pigment I'm going to use and why I am painting six feet on the man's figure. Nor is it any of your affair how I choose to employ lighting."

Paralleling certain film critics' antics, Craven, the critic, would vindicate Craven, the reporter, by rapping the coloring and lighting in Leonardo's subsequent effort. Even with men like Craven, Woollcott, Gabriel, Sanborn and Henderson it would be difficult to separate the Jekyl-Hyde characters of reporter and critic,—so why hope for it in present film reviewers?

In Hollywood, I am told, this angle is vicious. Credits given assistant directors, carpenters, make-up men and electricians in some reviews reflect reportorial associations of critics.

V.

Does Criticism Exist?

As an academic question in practical journalism:

Should the current analytical type of motion picture critique be published in New York daily newspapers?

Audiences (composed wholly of newspaper readers) attend films with a non-professional purpose to be amused or emotionally stirred; in any case, to be entertained through reactions, into the psychological mechanics of which they do not introspectively inquire. A film is good or bad, liked or disliked in its totality. If that total effect of an infinite number of individual reactions resulted from conscious design and artistry of the actor or producer bent upon achieving a premeditated, contemplated emotional effect,—that is food for a psychologist or analytical critic such as John Grierson, Ralph Flint, Evelyn Gerstein, John S. Cohen, or Robert E. Sherwood to discuss in an esoteric magazine read by artists similarly concerned in playing upon emotions of audiences.

The public neither knows nor cares, so long as barefaced hokum is not dragged into a screen situation by the seats of its figurative panties. Even then, I have seen strong men weep in cinemas as they cursed the director for a sentimental ass. . . .

Too many daily newspaper critics now are trying to prove by queer gauges of their own why a certain film is not good. The news fact is the reception spontaneously accorded a film by patrons who have spent money and time in a willful desire to like a picture. Discussion of the psychic causation therefore has no place in a daily paper's news columns,—the more so since movie critics are hardly competent to determine that cause.

The purely "high-brow" type of film critic—Mr. John Grierson is the high priest of this cult—should write for magazines, not newspapers. A newspaper reader wants to know if he is going to like a picture enough to part with his cash. Once I suggested to Grierson at lunch that he was criticizing directors for things that they never heard about; that most film directors do not consciously insert rhythm, tempo and visual flow into pictures (though I agreed it would be awfully nice if they did).

"You're quite wrong," said the distinguished Scotch student, "King Vidor directs with a metronome at hand."

And HOW?

VI.

Practical Suggestions

A review in a New York daily newspaper, then, should contain the following information, pending some ultimate definition of motion picture criticism subsequent to much discussion of the subject:

1. The full program of the theatre, including the divertissements (which interest parts of the audience, even though they do not interest the critic). While it is permissible to hope for a day when movies will be the only fare in movie theatres, the fact is otherwise. The length of the show, time of the feature picture and the complete billing of cast, producer, director, etc., should be stated. The last is now done by the Times, World, Herald-Tribune and some other papers. Further, though it is not done now, a review should list scheduled hours for showing of the feature film, so that persons particularly interested may see the picture in fifty minutes. Lunch hour attendances at film theatres would be increased and the reviewer would be serving his readers.

2. The plot of a picture should be recited in one paragraph, not to exceed in length seventy-five words. Movies are not so different in themes that a reader cannot tell the type of film from so brief a synopsis. Long narrations of stories are boring. Furthermore, if all surprises are eliminated, why see a picture?

3. If the picture is a comedy, that fact should be stated; and if the laughter of the audience was pronounced, then that is the news of the review to future audiences. Then the comedy must have been funny. Critical diagnosis of visual flow, essence of cinema, dynamics and rhythm is needless and superfluous. "They laughed their heads off" is true journalistic criticism at present. It is a canon of cinema criticism to judge any creation in terms of its maker's apparent objective. If D. W. Griffith wants to make them weep and they weep and like it, his is a successful and entertaining picture. If Harry Langdon wants to make them laugh and they hold their sides at his pantomime, the same is true.

4. Be fair. The critic is entitled to his opinion. He should state in a single sentence, near the end of his review, whether or not he liked a picture and why, but he should make the audience's evidenced opinion the vital news of the critique. It is not, strictly speaking, accurate to say that readers do not care about a critic's opinion. One usually follows the same man day after day, gets used to his turn of mind and his theories of picture-making and, even though one disagrees, the man has served as a weather vane.

5. A review should state to what type of audience a film is most apt to appeal. "This picture will delight the kiddies." "The flappers who cuddle close in the side loges will gobble up the love stuff in this one." Etc.

6. There is no place in motion picture criticism for the very prevalent type of critic who sacrifices sound thought, sincerity and even truth for allegedly witty lines. The criticism frequently hurled at certain New York reviewers, that they would rather be smart than right, is absolutely accurate. Sit with them at a preview and you will hear:

"That's a swell line, my dear. Mind if I use it as a head tomorrow?"

Then a paragraph or even a review is written around the line. The same is true of at least three dramatic critics. A review, then, should contain definite statements made without reservation or self-consciousness and after honest thought. Incidentally, in this connection, a critic who is not merely reporting but saying his say all through a review should not hedge and evade the issue, but place himself down yes or no on a picture. Straddlers abound.

Discussion of Style

7. Reviews should be written brightly, entertainingly, and with the thought in mind that they must read easily. The theory of visual flow should be aplied to reviews. As pure writing, the motion picture criticisms in New York papers are even inferior to editorials by sob sisters on women's pages. Bromidic, platitudinous phrases are dusted off and planked down countless times; metaphors are mixed as readily as cocktails.

Allene Talmey, who was working on The World six months ago, could write splendid interviews which made delightful reading. She introduced style into motion picture criticisms, and her Sunday interviews were so good that they are being issued in book form this fall—so far as I know, the only motion picture articles from a New York paper to be bound and sold for $2.50 a copy. But Miss Talmey, who was a weak critic because she did not know what she expected from a film, went off to Europe and returned recently to accept assignments from a major national magazine to write feature character sketches of international figures.

What Critics Said

Dick Watts, Wilella Waldorf and Martin Dickstein are the conscious stylists of the critics, and as such all are readable. Martin, Cohen and Cruikshank all write with a certain vigor. Rose Pelswick of the Journal composes excellent light verse and tells a good short story; but she is in the difficult position of owning intelligence and talent that her type of reader cannot fully grasp. She consistently directs her readers to films which she knows they will like, but which did not appeal to her. That is eminently right in a daily newspaper critic.

To be fair, I asked the movie critics what they thought a review should contain. To each one I happened to meet last week I handed the poser: What are you supposed to write? One answered, rather inconsistently:

"The movie moguls are dumb. They are feeding audiences stupid pictures of low taste because they think audiences are as vulgar as themselves. I do not think it necessary to pander to a public which is not dumb by praising vulgar pictures, even though they demonstrate their popularity by making fortunes."

The next said: "There should be no movie criticism. Newspapers ought to carry a column, giving about six lines to a new picture and reading like this:

"'The Baby's Little Booties'—At the Grand Theatre from Monday to Friday—A sentimental mother-love story about a drunken husband who spends it all at Grogan's on Saturday night as his baby whines. 'Daddy! Please come out through them there swingin' doors.' Eight reels, colored in one sequence in the third reel. Featuring Lizzie Glutz, Joe Gump and Baby Maggie Murphy. Direction of H. LeRoy Timber-Wolf."

Not being the worrying kind, the third and fourth critics had not even thought about the matter. No, the boss never had told them what or how to write; they just wrote the first things about a picture that came to mind. Would they pan a picture if its star had snubbed them or sent back a scenario? Why! Of course not!

The fifth critic said he believed directors read his reviews and that he felt he could do the art of the cinema a real service by pointing out defects in construction. No, he had never worked in a studio. He never had constructed a film himself.

My last witness is the present motion picture editor and critic of an evening newspaper. He does not like movies at all and he is intellectually honest enough to say so. He had to get work and the job was offered him.

VII.

Don't Pick on "Graft"

It is a little silly and very much unfair to New York critics and not particularly constructive criticism to cite the petty "graft" incidental to their jobs. It isn't so much as it's cracked up to be. We used to get together and chuckle over cheap perfumes and rotten cigars sent by companies and individuals as Christmas gifts. Generally the next reviews would see us bending a mile back in an effort to stand erect, so that the gifts had a reaction the exact reverse of the supposedly anticipated one. This "graft" is thought of so lightly that only one New York paper insists its critic return gifts.

Occasionally a star or producer bound for the coast leaves his car at the disposal of a New York critic, or flowers arrive the day after an unknown director has been "discovered." Once a very popular showman, whose large theatre is quite a factor now, sent a huge array of flowers to another editor on The Telegram for a signed article I had written about him. Another time a producer (who is much joked about) insisted upon weaving himself into the good graces of Dick Watts of the Herald-Tribune by exclaiming as he met him:

"Dick, I read your articles in The World every Sunday!"

As for the "graft," critics rarely like press agents because they are better paid, better informed and better situated to advance. Critics also pretend to loathe movie moguls because they do not attempt to learn facts about them and feel it incumbent on any smart person to scorn film magnates. A critic really is an inferior being who would like to be creative and lives in hope that eventually he will be offered $750 a week to start learning the picture business. He consorts with other critics from sheer defense and assumes an aggressive attitude only to bolster his own courage, whistling in the dark.

When Variety scratched the surface of alleged critical "graft" last year, some of the ladies were a little upset. One confessed:

"They could get plenty of stuff on me."

Yet silk stockings and auto rides do not influence the lady's criticisms so much as does her personal reaction to the manhood of the director or star. Nevertheless, this critic is a fine reporter and she attracts readers to her paper. Only a few months ago she published an item about a brilliant nail polish which Gloria Swanson uses, and she had twelve letters and ten telephone calls in two days from female readers who wanted the formula!

The point is, however, that all critics should strain to keep their skirts clear of any insinuation of subsidization. In this they could be materially aided by press agents. There have been, to my knowledge, two critics in New York who have accepted payment for writing publicity for press agents of national film companies, not in itself a criminal practice, but a most unethical one. These individuals only injure the class, destroy public and trade confidence, and lower the standard.

Nearly all of the New York critics are honest. Several of them are very intelligent persons with considerable background; at least two could hold their own no matter who entered the field of motion picture criticism. Three of the present lot are sons of wealthy parents, and as such are independent of their salaries and able to possess their critical souls.

It is not so much the alleged "graft." It is the ugly appearance of it that lessens confidence.

VIII.

Cooperation by Industry

The A. M. P. A., the Wampas, the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences, or the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association could aid development of motion picture criticism by one of several methods:

1. By cooperation with the American Newspaper Publishers Association, American Society of Newspaper Editors, Associated and United Press members, Editor and Publisher, and other newspaper forces. defining daily newspaper criticism of motion pictures or deciding to eliminate analytical critiques in favor of reportorial reviews.

2. By offering, through a similar agency to that employed in awarding Pulitzer Prizes for new stories, novels and dramas, substantial cash and medal prizes for most constructive criticisms of motion pictures during a year.

3. By selecting in each city the best critic of a given year, motion picturemen (who read all criticisms, which the public does not), being best suited to judge. If a sufficient amount of honor attaches to this award, it will be sought and better criticisms thereby induced. Nowadays a man may write a fine criticism and not even his wife notices it. That doesn't encourage good criticism.

4. By refraining, individually, from bitter criticisms of critics who publish adverse reviews which are in strict accord with a film's lack of merit. All "raves" make any critic's endorsement valueless. There must be valleys to be hills.

IX.

Bump the Ego!

For the advancement of motion picture criticism, it is essential that the ego of critics be suppressed. Perhaps this is a Quixotic hope, since it is ego-gratification above all else which inspires a man to write criticisms.

The pernicious practice of quoting critics by name outside New York, where their names mean nothing from an advertising sales standpoint, should be stopped. Critics naturally like to see their names stuck up on buildings and quoted in ads., especially as most of them are writing on the side and the advertising helps to build up the literary name. They do not realize that they are quoted because of the importance of the paper which employs them. As a result of the quoting practice followed by theatrical advertisers for a quarter of a century, half the movie critics in New York are deliberately injecting snappy lines, for quoting, in their reviews. Some of them brazenly set out their lines in single-sentence paragraphs at the ends of criticisms.

Advertising men of all national film companies should agree to quote newspapers, not individuals. It is done as a sop to critics, this quoting, not because any advertising manager believes a reviewer's name sells anything throughout the country. I laughed out loud when I saw my name in an Ohio newspaper advertisement as "a great critic who liked this film." Still, I have known an important and conservative critic on a splendid New York daily to telephone a press agent and arbitrarily insist upon learning why he had not been quoted!

Maybe the ego will get a bump when Variety publishes its first box score of movie critics. I am told it will be a rare critic whose average is above .500 and that many will be as low as .333! Think of it! A person supposed to advise half a million or a million New Yorkers whether or not to attend a film, and that person only able to guess rightly one out of three times, with the test the newspaper-reading public's patronage.

Compare those figures with Gilbert Gabriel's .895 average on plays. Surely no one will argue that out of the total number presented, a higher average of good plays comes to Broadway than of movies. Gabriel, then, is hitting the public taste squarely on the head 89 times out of 100, and Gabriel is one of the most profound, genuinely highbrow writers on the drama in America. For eight years he criticized music, for five the drama. When he was but a youth out of Williams College he won the praise of the great Jim Huneker. Gabriel, whose verdict is supported by the money-spending theatregoers of New York nine times out of ten, possesses a better-rounded knowledge of the arts than any six movie critics in New York put together. Yet he does not emulate their attitude of tossing wisdom from Underwoods and Remingtons clicking on Olympus.

Press Agents Can Help

To level the ego, press agents should not fawn upon critics. Critics don't like it, anyway. The whole thing is a 50-50 proposition. No movie critic in New York could get out a column if press agents agreed to blacklist him and withhold their news. Few stories are published as personal favors to press agents. There is no reason why an honest publicity man, who submits his stories on their worth as readable news, should be treated like a hobo hopping the blind baggage out of Galesburg, Ill., when the yard dick nabs him. A few publicity men have patted critical backs to such a degree that it will take several figurative haymakers in the breadbasket to straighten up some of the gentlemen. But this is not the case with art critics, dramatic critics and music critics, as classes. Why with the movie reviewers?

Perhaps it is because the critcal ego has beeen nourished by publicity men for so long a time that motion picture critic-reporters do not stand up with dramatic reporters like George Kaufman, Ward Morehouse, Frank Vreeland, Walter Winchell and Alison Smith. Perhaps, too, that is why movie reporter-critics are frequently incapable of getting stories themselves, and must rely on threatening publicity men with no subsequent breaks unless certain stories are released. A favorite device for one lady along this line is:

"You give that story to me and me alone or you get no break in my list of papers!"

The thing for a press agent to do, (and it has upon occasion been done!), is to reply:

"Lady, you build a bonfire with those papers! Everybody gets it at once."

As in reporting, the critical ego flows through reviews. It is:

"These tired eyes have not viewed so gorgeous a film in years," or

"This battered bonnet is doffed to director McSchultz who has, in your correspondent's humble opinion," or

"Since I discovered Harold Lloyd, I have not been so enthused about a comedian," or

"I liked the film immensely and nearly fell over in my seat laughing, it was that droll."

Captain! Wait for baby!

What did the boys in the back room think of the picture? Until we hit upon some real theory of journalistic criticism, if any, that will be the news.

A Critic Speaks

THE author of these articles, in his desire to be factful and fair, reports the following version of a fact stated in the first article,—as telephoned to him by the critic in question:

The article said that the critic once had posted a sign on her door (seen at the time by the author) to the effect that "Tuesday is the day for press agents. Stay out."

The critic says that while the words "Tuesday is the day for press agents" were on the door, the words, "Stay out," were not. Her sign was posted to let press agents know that she would be in on Tuesday, she says, so that it would not be necessary for them to call when she might be out, and thus waste their time. The critic says the sign was intended as a help to press agents rather than as the deterrent some press agents and one trade paper evidently took it to be. This is the critic's first public explanation of her motivation.

The sign's posting having been clarified, the author of these articles is happy to withdraw his stated objection to it as an affront to press agents. As a fact reporter, he naturally regrets the inaccuracy of the inclusion of the words, "Stay out,"—possibly due to a faulty memory, as the incident occurred nineteen months ago and no sign is available to decide the point. No signs have been posted for a year, to the author's knowledge.

COOPERATIVE publicity between picture theatres and the public library is the subject of one of our feature articles in this issue of The Showman, and the facts regarding the benefits derived by the Cleveland Public Library—where this form of publicity has been developed to its highest potentialities—would furnish more than one surprise to those outside the picture business, while the showman and the distributor not previously informed regarding the excellent work being done along this line, particularly in Cleveland, will find much to interest them and much by which they may profit in future through a perusal of the article by Ina Roberts.

Distributors who are cooperating wholeheartedly with the Cleveland Public Library by furnishing advance stills and press books on pictures which may lend themselves to this form of publicity are performing a real service in behalf of exhibitors who may show these productions in that city. And distributors who have not given this matter of library cooperation attention in the past would do well to instruct their publicity department to take the proper steps in that direction.

The exhibitors who have cooperated with libraries in a manner that has produced mutually beneficial results likewise have performed a valuable service. While those showmen who have not succeeded in interesting their local library officials in proposed cooperative drives, might succeed in changing adverse viewpoints by persuading the objectors to read this highly interesting and informative article, based upon facts gained through experience of years and many cooperative publicity campaigns based on photoplay tieups.

THE STANLEY IN NEWARK—A SPANISH ATMOSPHERIC THEATRE

De Luxe Theatre in Modern Style Creates Outdoor Setting for Presentations

ONE of the most beautiful atmospheric theatres in America.

That is the verdict of many theatre men, builders and architects who have seen the Stanley Theatre, newest Stanley-Fabian Theatre, Direction of Stanley Company of America, in Newark, N. J.

The Stanley, which is situated in the vailsburg section of the city, brings to the patrons the brilliant and haunting magic of Seville or Barcelona. All the glamor, all the color, all the gaiety of the romance loving people of the Southland of Europe are reflected in the architectural conception of the theatre. Hands skilled in the crafts of theatre building and decoration have admirably caught this conception so much so that it is graphically transmitted to patrons.

This Spanish conception is followed inside and out. Beauty of decoration and langorous comfort are main features. One views a program of de luxe motion pictures at the Stanley as if one were in Spain. One of the slogans of the theatre is its showing of photoplays "'Neath Spanish Skies."

There is an expansive cyclorama over the heads of the spectators. The walls have the appearance of many buildings with balconies and sunshades. The general setting is an outdoor Spanish night. Patrons look up and see the cloud-decked heavens fretted with more than 100 twinkling stars which peep out through the freize of rolling clouds produced by four cloud machines set in each corner of the theatre. Over the proscenium there is a huge moonburst which further creates the illusion of a romantic night.

The playhouse contains 2,000 seats set at comfortable distance.

Louis R. Golding, an executive of the Stanley-Fabian Corporation, conceived the idea of the Stanley. He spent more than two years in developing the details and general effects of the theatre. Then followed a tour of the country whereby Mr. Golding studied the latest type of atmospheric theatres in America. Points of interest were then incorporated into Mr. Golding's Spanish theatre conception. The plans for the playhouse were drawn by Frank Grad, Newark architect, with Mr. Golding supervising during the period of construction. Attention was paid to the smallest detail, including lighting fixtures, door-knobs, niches and the hundred and one things that go into the making of a modern playhouse. Warren MacEvoy, also of Newark, built this playhouse.

The ornamental details were done by the New York Ornamental Plaster Company while the interior painting was done by Signor Vincent Maragolotti, who also painted the Theatre Guild Playhouse, in New York city.

The inside foyer, with stairway leading to foyer balcony, one of the luxurious lounges provided patrons of the Stanley. The color scheme and furnishings fit into the atmospheric style featured in the interior and exterior design of the theatre.

On the left, the main foyer with view of the foyer balcony. This spacious entrance place introduces to the patron the out of door effect which has been achieved in the design of the Stanley and forms the first point of contact with the interesting inner features of this playhouse "Neath Spanish Skies."

THE BROADWAY THEATRE IS KINGSTON'S DE LUXE PLAYHOUSE

Stores and Offices in Theatre Building Designed by Douglas P. Hall

THE new "Broadway Theatre" on Broadway, Kingston, N. Y., which opened its doors to the public in June of this year, is a theatre of special notice.

The theatre is constructed on an irregular lot of approximately 2,400 sq. ft., with a frontage of 110 ft. on Broadway. This frontage is occupied by the business building 50 ft. deep, containing the main entrance to the theatre, four stores, and one floor of offices above. The Broadway elevation is finished in red brick with cut lime stone trimmings, with decorative panels of "Aztec" tile. The offices above are provided with large plate glass windows, which have made the office building very desirable renting space.

The theatre has been constructed entirely of fireproof material, brick, steel and concrete. Every detail essential to the public safety has been carefully studied and considered before being embodied in the general planning, and no materials other than those passed by the Fire-Underwriters are used in the general construction.

The house has a seating capacity of two thousand; thirteen hundred seats on the orchestra floor, four hundred in the balcony and three hundred Loge box seats. The seating arrangement provides, at a sacrifice of considerable space, wide and gently sloping main aisles between each bank of seats and affords easy entrance and egress with the least possible disturbance to those remaining.

An unusual feature is carried out in the orchestra, in addition to the three rows of Loge seats in the front of the balcony, three rows in the center of the orchestra having been railed off and constructed into Loge boxes, with special designed chairs. The remainder of the house is seated with substantially upholstered chairs, giving a maximum of comfort, which is so essential to the success of the present day theatre.

The interior of the house is Italian in style, the main feature being the double dome, (the outermost one being coffered to accommodate the ventilation and heating grilles), supported on a colonnade of columns twenty-six feet high. The house has a three-color lighting system, lighting effects being obtained by the dome coves and illuminated panels in the balcony soffet.

The entrance lobby, foyer, staircase foyer and mezzanine are also carried out in Italian design, with beamed ceiling in walnut and highly decorated with color. All floors are black and white marble, the wall being of a rough texture decorated with "Aztec" tile panels and antique tapestries.

A series of well appointed rest rooms, approached from the meezzanine promenade will afford privacy and comfort.

The stage 80 ft. x 32 ft. deep, with a proscenium opening of 40 ft. is complete in every respect. It is equipped with counter-balanced rigging, switch board, stage pockets, etc. It is the intention of Harry Lazarus to make a specialty of producing Broadway successes, and he has already presented a number with success.

Douglas P. Hall, architect and engineer of New York City, is the architect for this new building.

View of the auditorium of the Broadway, Kingston, N. Y., looking to the rear from the stage, shown above. The interior is Italian in style, the main feature being the double dome, supported on a colonade of columns twenty-six feet high.

On the left is a view of the stage and proscenium arch. The seating arrangement of the Broadway provides wide and gently sloping main aisles between each bank of seats affording patrons easy entrance and egress to balcony and orchestra chairs.

On the left, a view of the mezzanine promenade of the Broadway, also featuring the Italian style. The beamed ceiling is of walnut, highly decorated with color. Furnishings and decorations give this charming lounge an air of comfort and liveability.

The inner entrance and staircase leading to the mezzanine promenade is shown on the right. The wall treatment is of rough texture decorated with Aztec tile and antique tapestries. The floor is of black and white marble.

On the right, diagonal view of Broadway's auditorium taken from the stage level. The theatre has a seating capacity of two thousand; thirteen hundred seats on the orchestra floor, four hundred in the balcony and three hundred lodge box seats.

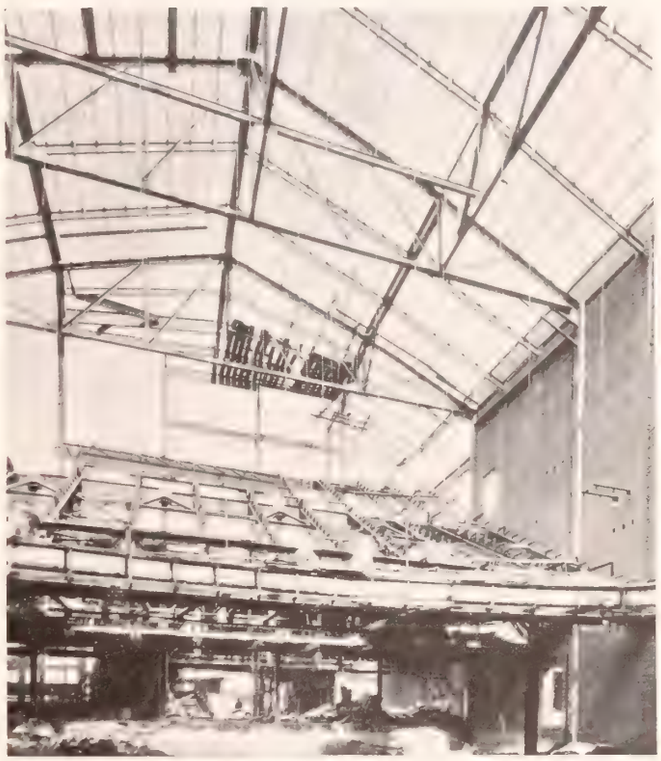
View across the auditorium from the balcony, affording a sectional view of the domed ceiling. The outermost dome is coffered to accommodate the ventilation and heating grilles. Lighting effects are obtained by the dome coves and illuminated panels in the balcony soffet.

ATMOSPHERIC THEATRE SOON TO OPEN IN GREATER NEW YORK

THE Universal theatre in Brooklyn, Greater New York's first atmospheric playhouse, is to be opened this month, according to present plans. Some time ago, Dan Michalove, general manager of Universal Chain Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., operating the theatre, set the tentative date of opening for September 15.

This "theatre picture," designed in accordance with a principle of showmanship of comparatively recent development and growing popularity, is the work of John Eberson.

The sketches reproduced on this page indicate the style of architecture for exterior and interior. The Universal is of the Italian garden style which the architect has employed so frequently since he originated the outdoor type of auditorium for picture presentations.



The Universal will have a seating capacity of 3,000 and is to include in its equipment and furnishings the latest appointments.

Left is an architect's sketch showing the exterior of the Universal Theatre in Brooklyn, designed by John Eberson, and the first atmospheric playhouse in Greater New York.

What Street Lighting Will Do for the Theatre Location

The street shown above would hardly attract people out after dark, its dim lighting rather marking it as a place to be avoided. WHILE—

This same street, lighted to a sufficiently high intensity, would be a good location for a motion picture theatre.

The Value of Good Street Illumination

By T. P. Brown
Eng. Dept. Edison Lamp Works

PRACTICALLY the first use of light was to furnish the aborigines with illumination whereby they could enjoy themselves. They had the flaming torch in their caves; and when they wanted to visit their neighbors to spend the evening, along would come the torch to light the way.

People must have enjoyment and pleasure. Those who work during the day find that their time for recreation is limited to the evenings. The problem of the moving picture industry is to convince the people that they can get the best amount of enjoyment and recreation through the medium of the screen rather than through any other source. And, having convinced them that the movies are the best thing for the money, the next step is to change the conviction into an impulse—a desire—a determination to see the pictures. But how does all of this fit in with street lighting?

Before answering the question directly let me analyze, for a moment, the psychology of light. The old Romans discovered that light dispels the fear of darkness. Light has always been associated with truth, uprightness, progress and constructive thought. The whole animal kingdom is attracted by light. Notice how the small insects will buzz around the street lamps, how birds will fly toward a bright beacon or a searchlight, how human beings will be attracted to a brightly lighted show window rather than a lighted one. We can't help it. There is poorly lighted one. We can't help it. attracts our eye and compels our attention.

In spite of the fact that the moving picture industry advertises its various productions so extensively, it is probably safe to say that the average movie fan accepts this message in a general way rather than with reference to any particular picture, unless it be an outstanding one. In other words, when he leaves his home, he is headed for "the movies," he will follow along the paths of light, patronize some theatre along this path. So that it behooves every theatre owner to make sure that he is on the path; to make sure that his street, his section of the town, is well lighted.

The particular local lighting around the theatre—signs, marquee, etc., are secondary to the street lighting. You cannot eat an apple until you possess the apple. Likewise, you cannot attract the crowds from the street unless the crowds are on the street: And the best way of ensuring that crowds will be on the street is good street lighting.

The question as to what constitutes good street lighting is more or less of a difficult one to answer especially when a layman asks the question. However, it may be said that the intensity of light on the street should vary with the size of the town, and the section of the town. City zoning and planning are furnishing the means by which many cities can expand systematically, with the greatest good to the greatest number. The essential feature of this question is the plotting of a city into various zones or districts—retail business, wholesale business, residential, suburban, etc., and allowing no encroachment by business on residences, etc. Illuminating engineers after studying the situation for years, have determined upon the amount of light suitable and necessary for each zone, and have determined further the relation between small and large cities. Table I gives the minimum values for the various zones, etc.

TABLE I

Population 50,000 to 100,000	120	125

Population up to 20,000	60	125

The standard street is taken as being 40 feet from curb to curb. For streets of greater width, the values of minimum lumens per linear foot should be increased in the same ratio as the width of street.

Just a word would not be amis at this point in regard to the phrase "minimum

In Presenting Motion Pictures I Have Always These Basic Principals in Mind:

IN presenting motion pictures to the public, I have always several basic principles in mind:

Happiness begins at home. Do something different. It's the little things that count.

Now to elaborate—"Happiness begins at home." That is to say if you want your guests to enjoy themselves you must bear in mind, first of all that they are your guests; and second you must assure yourself that you are providing comfortable, well regulated quarters and that you have entrusted the welfare of your visitors to a competent and contented staff. Dissatisfaction among employees not only destroys the morale, but it quickly communicates itself to your clientele. It isn't a difficult matter to make your staff happy. All you have to do is to be human, to remember that those boys and girls are starting off on the sea of life, that they want their chance to reach their goal and attain the fulfillment of their hopes and aspiration.

To this end, we have installed a definite system of promotion. There is an honor role and a demerit system by which those who have earned the right are automatically headed for promotion. The page boy of today is the housemanager of tomorrow if he fulfills his obligations consistently and well. Our boys know this, and it encourages them in their ambition to "get to the top"—the desire of every normal American boy. Already, though the theatre has been open only a few months, promotions are in order. Since good health is the foundation of every human endeavor, physical training is essential. Our young men are trained by an ex-sergeant of the Marines who puts them through their daily routine of setting-up exercises. There is a hospital fully equipped on the premises where a sprained ankle, sore throat, headache, etc., can be nipped in the bud and hand ball courts are in the making.

I am a great believer in giving the young fellow another chance, and on those occasions when a lad has been weighed in the balance and found wanting, I make it my personal business to examine the culprit and to plumb the depths of his offense. It is a duty and a welcome one, I should think, for every man in authority to see that every boy in his employ is given not only a square deal, but a chance to make a man of himself if by misfortune, temptation has been too strong for him and he has succumbed. It's seldom I find that one's faith in human nature is abused, but the good you can accomplish outweighs your failures.

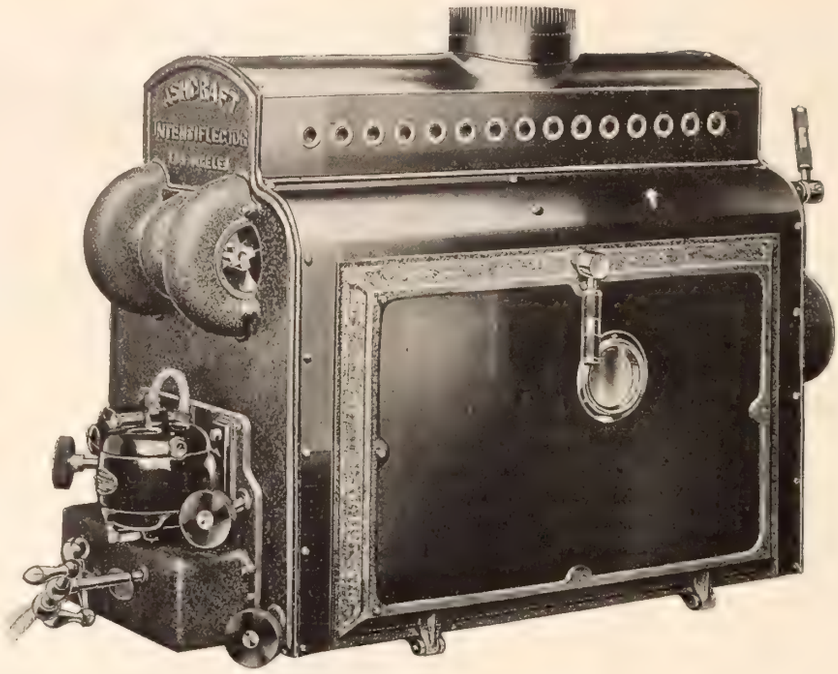
1. Happiness Begins At Home.
2. Do Something Different.
3. The Little Things Count.

"Do Something Different"—By this I mean don't be afraid to strike out for yourself, don't slavishly attempt to follow the fellow in the next block. If you've got ideas use them. Develop your own individuality, it will communicate itself to your patrons. If you are of a humorous turn of mind, put a little of that into your programs. If you are an artist at heart, let that make itself felt in your presentations. It's individuality that counts and don't be afraid of anything being too good for your public.

IT'S been my experience that the public responds like lightning to anything that is really good, and in such cases where I have attempted something I felt to be good, and it failed, I know that I myself was wrong, not the public. It was my error in judgment, not theirs. But if you give your theatre a personality, you will find that you establish a bond of sympathy between you and your patrons, that they will understand, and that they will not only appreciate your efforts on their behalf, but stick to you through your failures.

Third: "It's the little things that count"—If you want to keep the good will of your public, you must show them consideration. You must think of them. It's the same with an audience as it is with friendship. Gilbert and Sullivan, you know, severed a lifelong friendship over a piece of carpet. It isn't luxury, nor gold braid, quantities of marble which please your audience. It's your consideration for them. The exhibitor on Main Street has just as much chance to make his audience "feel at home," as the man who runs a big theatre on Broadway. The tiny cottage on the edge of a prarie often houses ten times more happiness than the mansion on Fifth Avenue, because of the spirit which dwells therein.

With our added facilities, we, of course, have taken every precaution to insure the least possible inconvenience to those who come to the Roxy. As you know, we can house ten thousand people under one roof. It takes a staff of five hundred to insure their welfare and the demands on the energies of this staff are so great that a relief system has been installed not only that they have respite to fifteen minutes, but relays of fresh men constantly appear on duty.



IN order that "the little things" which annoy patrons are obviated to every possible degree we have built, for example, a marquee extending the whole length of the building and the lobby where soft music plays during change of program, houses 4,000 against inclement weather. The Lost and Found Department is conveniently installed in the lobby, one of our house managers is always on hand, maids are on hand in the ladies' rest rooms, no gratuities are allowed, and the lights are not glaring. Little things you say, but it's the little things that count. Our aim is to establish a soothing, not a distracting atmophere—that atmosphere that is to say of the well-regulated home.

Its "the personal touch" as an old friend of mine used to say which counts. I keep in touch constantly with the heads of my departments. We have staff meetings, staff luncheons and dinners, and my suite on the top floor of the Roxy is ever open to receive members of my staff who wish to discuss their problems with me. All may confer over the various problems in the library, or over the dinner table in between sessions. We give as much thought to the "the little things" as to the big issues for it is the little things that count.

Theatre Man Establishes Own Printing Shop

The printing bills of Sam Blair, owner of theatres in Belleville, Kas.; Scandia, Kas.; Mankato, Kas., and Clyde, Kas., had become so large that he sought a remedy for the expense. Finally he hit upon an idea. He did nothing other than establish a print shop of his own. Aside from the printing work for his theatres, the shop does almost enough outside work to pay the overhead expenses.

THE ASHCRAFT INTENSIFLECTOR

What It Will Do For Your Theatre---

1 BETTER PROJECTION THROUGH INCREASED ILLUMINATION

This lamp changes the blue-gray of high intensity to clear-white light which is distributed evenly over the entire screen—not white in the center and brown on the edges.

2 REDUCES HIGH INTENSITY CURRENT 50%

If your theatre is now equipped with high intensity lamps, you can reduce your current 50% with an improvement in screen results. That is, 60 amperes with the Intensiflector produces the equivalent in light of 120 amperes high intensity (old style).

3 CARBON COST REDUCTION

Due to decreased current and improved design your carbon bill will be reduced 40% with the Intensiflector.

4 IF YOUR THEATRE IS OPERATING ON LOW INTENSITY REFLECTOR

arcs we can improve your projection unbelievably with a very small increase in current consumption. We can give you de luxe projection with 60 amperes.

The Press Books Are O. K.! But–Some of Them Forget To Remember the Little Fellow

"If the press book ideas demand expenditures beyond the small town manager's means, then it is not fulfilling its mission to the man it is supposed to serve," says Mr. Blaufox.

By Jay David Blaufox
(Former Director of Publicity, B. S. Moss' Colony Theatre; Exploiteer and Theatre Manager)

THE press books really are good. In most of them, no stone is left unturned to assist the exhibitor in every conceivable manner to put the picture across. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are spent annually to render this service to the projector of motion pictures—and this press book service is always rendered absolutely free of cost.

Ideas for presentations are offered. Suggestions for the exploitation of the screen drama or comedy are submitted and, when used, often result in a capacity house.

But—there is some one the press book makers overlook. And that is the little fellow. The chap who would like to use every suggestion it holds for him, but owing to the cost, is unable to utilize them. True, this is one of the local conditions over which the desk man in the home office has no control, but which he must nevertheless acquaint himself with if he hopes to have his books used one hundred per cent.

This local condition can be taken in a general sense, for Main Street is Main Street the world over. The small town theatre manager is invariably limited as to expense. But most press books fail to realize this. The result is that the ideas and suggestions are over his head as far as money is concerned and he cannot and does not take advantage of them. And believe me, they are in most cases excellent ideas and suggestions. And, since the little fellow can't afford to touch them so why not include ideas that he can utilize?

For a theatre to be successful and be made to pay, one of the most vitally important essentials is the economy of operation. If the press books demand the expenditure of monies beyond the small town manager's limited means, then that press book is not fulfilling its mission to the man it is supposed to serve. The only specific examples that I can extract from the books are presentation ideas and some of the suggestions for advertising.

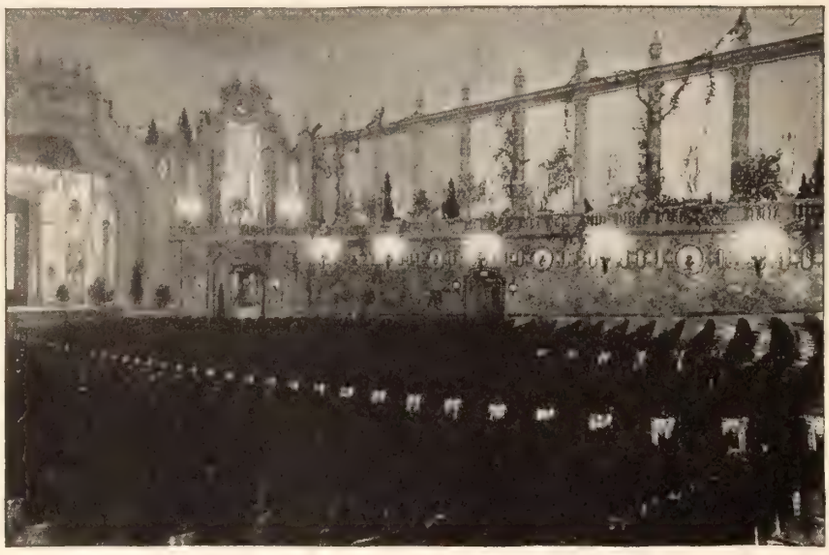
The public wants presentations. In many places they are demanding them but they won't pay more for pictures and want the presentation or prologue thrown in. This means that the manager must spend additional money for his program which he must get back somehow. He must economize somewhere and invariably he does so in his advertising. Most of the ideas for prologues, or "atmosphere creators" as some of us choose to call them, call for expensive drops, props and electrical effects. Too bad! Really splendid ideas, but since for the little fellow who has no access to all of these, it is impractical.

And mind you, the little exhibitor hasn't such a foolish looking little theatre today. They are building houses in small towns now that put some of those in the bigger cities to shame. The Capital Theatre, in Portchester, which I had the distinction of handling before and after its opening is one of the most beautifully appointed theatres in the country, and if transplanted bodily to Broadway, would not seem in the least out of place. This house, of course, can afford a great deal more than houses I am speaking for. I merely cited it to bear out the fact that small towns are now receiving the best that architectural ingenuity can conceive, and that such places are factors to be considered in the successful maintenance of the present enviable record of the motion picture industry.

A little more thought might be given to the presentation angle in the press books for this is one of the most important, and valuable helps rendered the exhibitor. But it must be inexpensive, else it defeats its own purpose.

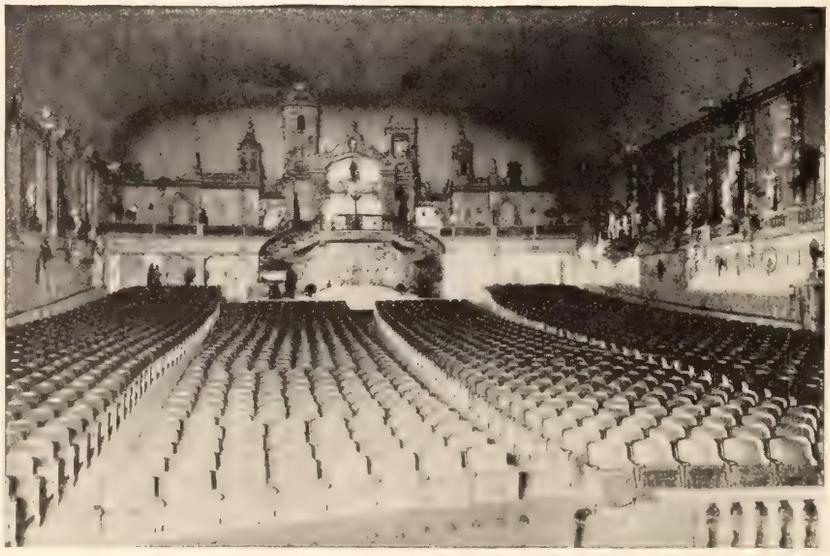
Another thing to consider for the little fellow is his advertising help. Generally it is excellent, but even here economy of expense is unconsciously overlooked by the Press Book Chap.

The majority of mats designed for the user of limited advertising space as laid out by the home office departments—by men who are not managers and may never have had the experience that comes to the person who has had to run a theatre—usually does not meet with the requirements for several reasons.



It must first be remembered that the country newspapers are issued in nearly all cases, once a week. In some cases the editions appear bi-monthly. This, then, makes the manager's job of laying out his advertising just a bit more difficult. Particularly when his program changes every two days, or if the town requires it, every day. If he is limited for space, as he oftentimes is, and he is a progressive sort of chap who believes in doing justice to the picture he is playing by properly exploiting it with the use of mats, he suddenly acquires a headache when he finds that most of the mats are too large for a well laid out advertisement. So he eliminates them, much to his own chagrin and the financial loss of the accessories department.

The small town manager is not averse to dressing his ads with pictorial embellishments. He realizes their value and wants to use them. But when he resorts to the press books and finds no cooperation there for him, he becomes discouraged and uses nothing but the ordinary program layout, which merely serves to remind, rather than to attract.



My personal experience is what I know best and can quote intelligently. During my own siege as manager and publicity director of small town theatres, by advertising appropriation had more often been limited. The money alloted me for this important item did not permit me to use more than two columns eight inches in each of the five weekly newspapers covering the various towns from which these theatres drew their patronage. In one of these theatres, the program was changed Monday, Wednesday and Fridays for a while until it was found that a four-a-week policy was more expedient and the program was again changed to Mondays,

Library Cooperation With Film Theatres

By Ina Roberts
Publicity Representative, Cleveland Public Library

LIBRARY-FILM cooperation is still in its infancy, although much has been accomplished along this line and more is being done all the time by librarians throughout the country.

The Cleveland Public Library cooperation began in 1924 with a bookmark listing books of particular interest in connection with the filmed version of the Sabatini novel "Scaramouche." I learned in the local office of the producers of this film that the Cleveland library bookmark has been duplicated in every town containing a public library in which the picture was subsequently shown.

Today film bookmarks are almost a weekly occurrence and the Cleveland Public Library is now posting a copy of these bookmarks in every book listed on the bookmark. This plan connects forever all the books thus listed, making available the entire list to each person reading any one book. It also serves to keep the existence of the filmed version in the public mind. In the days to come when moving pictures have become incorporated into our system of education and Boards of Education compile lists of "Required Films" as well as lists of "Required Reading," these bookmarks will have an added value.

This library-film cooperation which began modestly with a conversation between the Cleveland Library's newly installed publicity representative (this was in 1924) and a man who knows how to listen well, M. A. Melaney, publicity director for Loew's Cleveland Theatres, has now grown to rather astonishing proportions in magnitude and importance.

The plan of procedure in the Cleveland Library cooperation is as follows: The publicity office keeps, by means of the trade papers, a card file of pictures. On reading that a picture is to be made, the card is filed and the progress of the making watched. In the meantime the publicity office has notified the Order Department and the heads of divisions carrying connecting books so that orders may be placed for extra books needed for cooperation with the film. These orders are nearly all for books in the non-fiction class, the exception being the classics that are filmed; sometimes as many as 75 extra copies of a classic are purchased; because if its filmed version is to be shown in Cleveland these copies can be used until worn out, the demand for classics being steady and perennial. The foregoing is the reason why the Cleveland Public Library can so seldom cooperate with films made from best-sellers; unless these are classics this cooperation would bring a demand for extra copies of the book that, if purchased would, in six months or a year, lie idle on the shelves.

As soon as production is completed the publicity office writes (usually to the New York office of the producers) for one set of stills and a pressbook. When received, these are routed to each division of the Main Library having connecting books and also to the heads of the Branch, Schools, Stations and County departments.

It may be well to state in passing that the Cleveland Public Library system consists of a main library, 26 branch libraries, 30 high school libraries, 108 station libraries (in factories, department stores, fire engine houses, etc.) and 12 county libraries. Thus it is that the cooperation with a film, if approved and begun in the main library with the first or road-show run, may follow the picture through its second and third runs and on to the outlying districts.

WHEN the one set of stills has been routed to all these places the publicity office writes to New York for the number required. In the case of "Ben Hur" more than 200 stills were used. For "The King of Kings" the various divisions and libraries have ordered a total of 160 stills. These will be used by the Exhibit Committee for a show-case and street window exhibits and by the History, Fiction, Philosophy and Religion, Foreign Literature and Literature divisions for exhibits and book displays with stills and posters, also in the branch, schools, stations and county libraries.

When advance publicity men, the local representatives of producers or the exhibitors request that a bookmark be issued and distributed in connection with the Cleveland showing of a film the matter is referred by the Library's publicity representative to the editorial office. The first step is to get the film approved for cooperation and also an O. K. for the bookmark. This done, each division having connecting books sends these to the library editor, Mrs. Julia Harron, who selects from the many books the few appropriate for the bookmark, groups these with pertinent sub-heads, tops the list with an apt quotation and sends the copy, all ready for the printer, to the publicity representative, who adds the "frame" at the end, announcing the film and adding a courtesy acknowledgement to the theatre paying for the printing. This copy, duly approved, is then turned over to the person who has requested the bookmark with the stipulation that proof be submitted to the library editor.

THE library also stipulates that since the bookmarks are distributed in the libraries of the Cleveland system an equal number must be distributed in the theatre showing the film; the Cleveland Library is always eager to interest those not already using its services.

The picture when shown in Cleveland should find library exhibits and displays installed; book marks should have been distributed in theatres and libraries for a week previous.

The chief drawback to complete co-operation is the difficulty of securing the library approval for co-operation far enough in advance of the Cleveland showing. It is of the utmost importance that library cooperation begin as far as possible in advance of the Cleveland showing. So far as the obtaining of stills and press books is concerned, this is a simple matter for these can be secured, sometimes must be, before the film is approved for co-operation. With stills and press books at hand to assist, librarians can select books and pictures combining with the stills in displays and exhibits. These displays and exhibits, however, cannot be put in place until the film has been approved. In the case of most of the road show films the matter of approval can be decided from the reviews but with most other films the picture must be seen by librarians before the approval can be secured.

The solution of this problem is, of course, a special screening for library officials and this the producing company concerned is always glad to arrange provided the necessary print is available. This, however, is not always the case; library-film co-operation suffers much in Cleveland because of the delay in seeing the film. This delay holds up both the preparation and the installation of exhibits.

In the matter of stills the cooperation is well systematized. These arrive promptly in response to the request of the publicity representative; one company, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, sends me a set of stills on every feature film turned out just as soon, I feel sure, as these reach the New York office. It would be better still if stills were sent from the studio just as soon as ready. A press sheet should always accompany stills if one is available; if not, it should follow the stills as soon as possible.

It may be said in passing that stills are vital in library-film cooperation. It is the stills that separate the group of connecting books in displays from the thousands of books that line the walls about them; the stills also serve to attract the attention of visitors, causing them to stop to look first a the stills, then at the books. Of course, the pertinent posters turned out by the library's curator of exhibits, Albert C. Young, contribute their part to the success of exhibits. Of assistance also are the newspaper accounts.

CERTAIN it is that the combined results of these factors is gratifying to the library and it affects, of course, the popularity of the film also. Before the days of library film cooperation the presence in Cleveland of any film was not felt to any great extent in the library outside of the fiction division where the demand for novels that have been filmed has always been heavy.

But now—library-film cooperation is luring many readers from the fiction division to the travel and biography books. Biography circulation in particular is affected. One reader inquiring for the life of a famous personage figuring in a film chiefly historical said that she had first seen the picture, then read the novel "and now," she added, "I want to read this man's life." The reading of biography often leads to an interest in the period featured. In the same way film displays in the travel and biography division often send to see the film serious-minded readers who would not be interested in the exhibitor's advertising. Often, too, the interest of the reader moves from the sensational to the serious. During the first run of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" the public's book interest centered in the life of Mary, Queen of Scots and the reserve orders for these were heavy; for a year after the film left Cleveland it was impossible to keep a history of Queen Elizabeth on the shelves of the main library.

A film with a strongly marked travel interest always causes a demand for the corresponding books. For a year after the advent of the filmed version of "Sea Tracks of the Speejacks" the book was heavily reserved. The Cleveland Library's cooperation with "Ben Hur" helped to circulate, in addition to copies of the novel itself in seven languages, books on the following subjects; piracy, galleys, chariots, horses, Roman art, religious art, the places of the story and the life of Christ.

"The Black Pirate," "Michael Strogoff," "The Yankee Clipper," "Monte Cristo" all brought a brisk demand for connecting books; "Beau Geste" on its first run aroused an interest in reading matter connected with the Foreign Legion that still continues.

THE producing companies can greatly assist library-film cooperation by making more stills of the kind the libraries can use. These are never the emotional plot stills and the close-ups wanted by the newspapers and primarily desired by the exhibitor for lobby use. Previous to the days of library-film cooperation the kind of stills desired by librarians were so little used by newspapers and exhibitors that fewer and fewer of them were made. Now all this is changed and it would well pay producers to consider the needs of libraries when making stills. In the film "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" were beautiful views of the exterior of the historic mansion itself; no exterior views, however, appeared in the stills.

The exhibitor who has so far been unable to convince his local library of the

Superiorities of C-H Simplicity Dimmers

Solid soapstone bases have high heat dispersion and insulating qualities—great continuous load capacity—and they won't burn out.

Contacts on each side of plates allow twice as many circuits in the same space. Plates can be taken out by removing one screw. Plates of any capacity can be substituted—allowing easy adaptation to all theaters.

Low ratio rack and pinion drive eliminates play and back-lash. 110 distinct steps with no overlapping of contacts assure flickerless fading from full brilliancy to black out. Brushes of Cophite—a non-oxidizing, self-lubricating material.

WHY can one theater charge more and still pull bigger crowds than another, with the same program, on the same evening? Lighting effects — there lies the outstanding advantage of one theater over another.

When presented with the aid of C-H Simplicity Dimmers any program is better. By creating a fitting atmosphere for the picture, an atmosphere which banishes the "cares of every day", C-H Dimmers assure your patrons more restful entertainment.

Simplicity Dimmers can be economically operated and easily installed in your theater — regardless of its age, size or decorative scheme. Ask your electrical contractor or architect.

Over 800 theaters have already profited by the pulling power of C-H Dimmers. All are listed by name and address in the Booklet "Illumination Control for the Modern Theater"—which also tells why C-H Dimmers are superior. Write for your copy.

New Powers Gate Assembly

New Film Gate Assembly for Powers Projectors

IT is not often that the projector manufacturers have occasion to offer something "new." For projectors, unlike automobiles, are not adaptable to a merchandising program which provides a new line of body colors, a different kind of fabric for upholstery, and a new finish on the radiator shell as the sum total of a brand new model—dated six months ahead of the calendar.

The projector manufacturers, however, are not standing pat on their machines. Continued and continual effort is made to improve and refine their product, and wherever experience shows that something different is required to meet any changing conditions or correct any weakness revealed by continued use, every effort is put forth to solve the problem.

The International Propector Corporation, as a result of over two years of research and testing by the engineering department, has perfected a new film gate assembly with lower fire shield for the Powers Projector. This important improvement supplies a demand which has resulted from the rapidly growing use of the reflector lamp, the high intensity and other illuminants with extremely high candle power and corresponding increase of heat.

The new Powers film gate assembly provides protection against overheating and ignition of the film, in addition to affording the projectionist absolute protection against burns and other discomforts due to handling heated parts of the mechanism. Moreover, the tension is reduced to a minimum without interfering with the steady showing of the film on the screen.

For the present the new gate is being supplied only on new Powers Projectors, but it is expected that within a short time it will be available for those who already have these machines installed. The new gate will readily fit any Powers 6-A or 6-B mechanism and may be attached in four or five minutes.

The gate is massive in construction and so designed that there are two large cooling spaces between three widely spaced heavy metal shields. The front shield or baffle plate which covers almost the entire mechanism front is of waffle iron design which secures ready and rapid radiation of heat. To the front baffle are attached completely insulated bakelite finger plates above and below for the protection of the projectionist's fingers and this feature is carried still further in the construction and design of the latch gate itself. On this front baffle is mounted the automatic fire shutter, an accurately balanced sheet steel curtain having great thickness which closes and opens at a projection speed of approximately forty-five to fifty film feet per mniute. The eye shield, which is of new design, is part of the front plate and may be readily removed by simply lifting it from its supporting spindle. Back of this front baffle is another heat dissipating unit and between the two a cooling flow of air is assured at all times. To this second plate is attached the gate latch and gate latch spring which also carries the upper film guide roller, the upper fire shield and the pad to which are attached the pressure pads and their respective tension springs. All parts normally exposed to heat are thoroughly protected from the direct light rays which would tend to render them inoperative. The old lower fire shield assembly has been discontinued and in its place a new device having a positive lock has been attached.

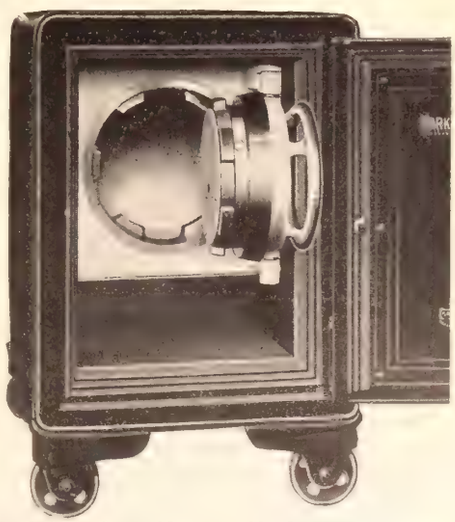
With the new film gate assembly it will no longer be necessary to hold the film in place when closing the gate. The gate may be repeatedly opened and closed while the film is being projected, each time the gate is closed the film will automatically be placed where it properly belongs.

A New Development in Hoods for Color Lighting

THE Reynolds Electric Company, manufacturers of Color Hoods, Flashers for electric signs, etc., have just placed on the market a new device called a Color Hood Holder, to be used in connection with RECO Color Hoods.

The Holder is made of noncorrosive metal, and is made to be used in connection with both the screw and flush types of receptacles. With the former the Hood Holder is clamped to the face of the sign surface by means of the screw socket, whereas with the flush type socket it is fastened to the surface with the two screws which hold the receptacle. The Hood Holder has a quarter-turn thread which securely holds the Color Hood.

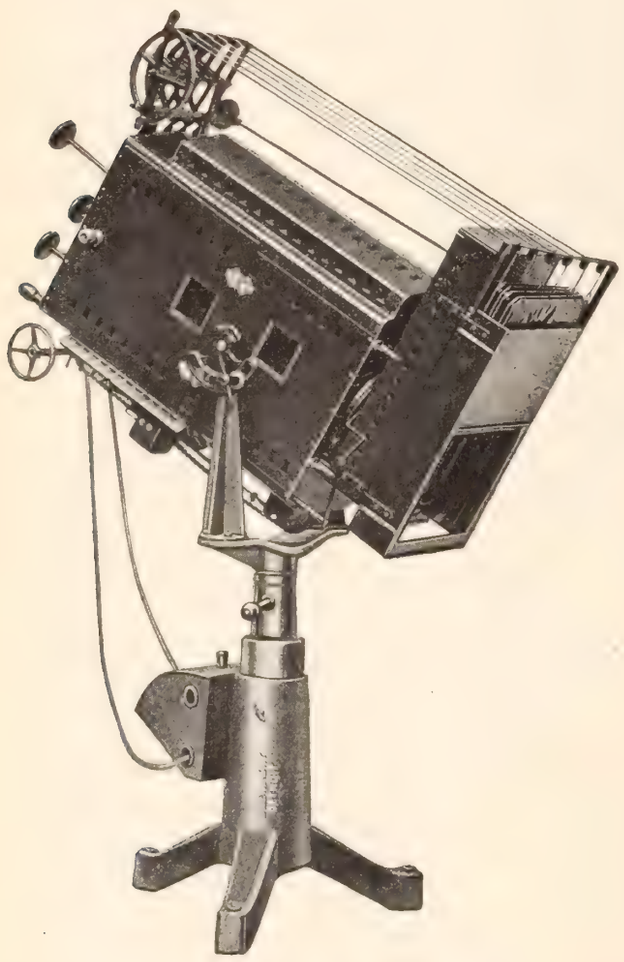
The advantages of this Hood Holder are: The lamp is protected from dust and dirt, and the matter of cleaning is thereby simplified. Furthermore, the Hood Holder prevents the white light from escaping through the end of the Hood.



Color Hoods are furnished in six standard colors: Ruby, Green, Canary, Amber, Blue and Opal;

Interchangeable Parts Used in Burglary Chest

IT is a lean day's news as related by newspapers throughout the country that does not yield at least one story about a robbery or hold-up, and the theatre is becoming increasingly prominent as the victim of some bold and usually cunning job of this outlaw craft.



For reasons quite obvious the theatre is selected as one of the most desirable fields for the operations of bandits and burglars. For one thing there is usually a good prize in the coin of the ealm for the looter to obtain if successful. For another the distinctly public character of the theatre allows the crook to carefully observe the "lay of the land" before completing his plans of operation, and robberies of the kind which take place in theatres are no haphazard affair. As proof of this we have the records of theatre robberies showing that there are more hold-up attempts following a holiday—during which, of course, the theatre

Five Vital Features of the New Brenkert C-14

These five vital features of the New Brenkert C-14 give to the theatre a type of projection service that has never before been possible. The machines are designed and manufactured according to Brenkert standards of quality which have always represented the highest attainable. For complete information regarding Brenkert products just write

1. Specially designed arc burner allows perfect control of the light source. The special rack and pinion assure steady precise feeding. A perfect, clear cut spot is maintained for the entire length of the carbon turn.

2. Counter balanced lamp house allows perfect control of the light beam. This counterbalancing mechanism makes it unnecessary to lamp the lamp house so that it is always free to be moved in any position.

3. Double lens equipment gives spot or flood instantly. Each lens is selected to give finest results. A brilliant flood or a clean cut spot may be had at the twist of your wrist.

4. Flame shield eliminates false images giving a perfectly round, sharply defined disc of light. No tail flame, no double image effect

Locating the Projection Room Ports

Proper Placement Will Save Projectionist Many Needless Steps

ONE of the simplest things in connection with the design of theatre projection rooms is the location of the projection ports which permit the passage of the light beams from the various projectors to the stage and screen. Probably this is the reason why the job frequently is so messed up as to pactically exclude certain pieces of equipment from theatres even when "allowances" for future, if not for present, installations have been made by providing what was thought to be required in the way of ports.

The sensible location of such openings in the front wall of the projection room is a simple thing in itself. Yet, it requires a knowledge of quite a few factors having to do with the practical side of projection, in addition to knowing in advance just what will be required in the way of such projection equipment as motion picture projectors, stereopticon lanterns, spotlamps, and effect machines.

The placement, with relation to each other, of the various pieces of equipment in the projection room in a fair sized theatre is not entirely a matter of guesswork and, indeed, should be carefully studied before the equipment has been bought, much less before the projection ports have been cut.

The projection room is to the theatre what the humble kitchen is to the home and it is, therefore, just as essential to save the projectionist many needless and weary steps as it is to conserve the energy of the housewife, if the much advertised claims of the kitchen cabinet manufacturers are to go unchallenged.

Experience, acquired over no small number of years' indicates that there are but a limited number of ways in which the projection room equipment can be placed to insure all-round satisfactory results.

Where seven or eight projectors, including the now commonly used dissolving stereopticon, spotlamps and effect projectors are used, it is commonly the practice to place the motion picture projectors (now usually three in number) in the center of the room, with relation to the front wall, so that the middle projector (in a three machine installation) will be in line with the centerline of the screen.

If this is done, serious distortion of the screen picture is avoided and the screen, furthermore, will reflect its incident light more equally over the seating area instead of favoring a certain section of the theatre interior.

With the picture projectors so located, the spotlamps, placed in a single group, may then be located either to the right or left of the projectors, whichever position is deemed best by the projectionists. The dissolving stereopticon lantern and effect projector, forming the third group, are then placed on the remaining open side of the picture machines.

Diagram showing placement of projector booth units and ports placed in proper relation to each other.

If this arrangement is adhered to, and it commonly is, then the three distinct groups of projectors are kept separated and yet close enough together so that needless cross-paths are avoided as the projectionist successively performs his various duties.

The arrangement of the portholes in accordance with the plan just described would appear as in Fig. 1, which is offered as a working sketch. In this figure, the view is toward the stage or screen and the spotlamps are shown as being to the right of the picture projectors, while the slide and effect machines occupy the position to the left.

An alternate arrangement, of course, would be to switch the positions of the spotlamps and effect machines if such a change favored other conditions.

A subject of much argument is that of the proper size of the various portholes for passing the light beams from the various projectors. The "proper" size of the ports could be defined, probably, as the smallest size opening required for fully satisfactory results.

The dimensions given in Fig. 1 have been found to be practicable under normal conditions and are commonly adhered to wherever care has been exercised in the layout of projection rooms. Portholes should never be larger than absolutely necessary, but considerable caution is required when endeavoring to ascertain just what is "absolutely necessary."

With the exception of those ports for the effect projector and stereopticon lantern, the size of the remaining portholes can be accepted without question. It is quite likely, however, that the near future will see developments which will call for much smaller ports for the effect projector and stereopticon lantern, and it is not at all unlikely that even the size of the spotlamp ports, too, will be reduced in size as a result of the construction of newer types of lamps.

Indeed, it appears as though the day is not far off when the largest port opening required will measure 16 inches, if not 12 inches, square.

With the equipment as at present available, however, the dimensions as given in Fig. 1 should be adhered to.

Hooked Radio to Vitaphone to Furnish Fight Returns

An experiment in which the Vitaphone equipment of the Liberty theatre in New Kensington, Pa., was put to novel use was recently completed with notable success. The management of the Liberty provided patrons of the house with an excellent reception of the ringside account of the Dempsey-Sharkey fight by means of a radio hook-up with the loud speaker system used in connection with Vitaphone.

Russell C. Roshon, publicity director of the Columbus Amusement Company, operating the theatre, states in a report of the event to this department that owing to uncertainty as to the outcome of the experiment there was little advance advertising used in connection with it.

A radio receiving set embodying all the latest improvements received the returns from the fight and they in turn were amplified by the powerful instruments of the Vitaphone. The Liberty management had the cooperation of a local radio firm, and the installation and operation of the radio-Vitaphone presentation was handled by an expert supplied by this company.

Through Mazda service the achievements of world-wide research and experiment in the laboratories of General Electric are given exclusively to lamp manufacturers entitled to use the name Mazda.*

For small or medium size theatres, editing rooms, scoring rooms, churches, schools or any place where the "throw" does not exceed 120 feet, incandescent lamp projection gives entirely satisfactory results at a saving of about fifty per cent on operating costs.

Incandescent lamp projection is steady—the intensity of illumination on the screen is uniform—there are no flickers or shadows. No adjustment is required during the period of operation; the projectionist can give his entire attention to the screen and film in the projector.

Like all other tpyes of light sources, to obtain the best results it is important that proper installation be made.

We will gladly inspect your theatre and advise you whether or not incandescent lamp projection is adaptable to it. Our services are free and give you the benefit of MAZDA service.* Just write to the Edison Lamp Works of General Electric Company, Harrison, N. J.

Press Books O. K., But What About the Little Fellow

Wednesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. It can be readily appreciated that with such changes of policies, the space alloted to each picture in the advertising columns of my weekly newspapers was worse than inadequate, and my appropriation was not flexible enough to allow for an increase in space. Where a manager is so limited, and there are doubtless thousands of them throughout the country, there can be seen the dire importance and necessity of the absolute cooperation and thought required by those who are the makers of one of the greatest helps to the exhibitor.

There are only two organizations to my knowledge who have realized this need and met it with small, picturesque slugs which may be used in such an emergency.

Give a thought to the little fellow. He wants to use your press book, perhaps more than even you want him to use it. Your ideas are good but they cost too much. Put yourself in his place—remember that his main battle is keeping expenses down—and govern your ideas accordingly. If this is done, the acme of press book perfection will be realized and the ideal press book will be evolved.

The Value of Good Street Lighting to the Theatre

values." Of course, the essential reason for street lighting is that of protection—protection of property and protection of traffic. Therefore, the absolute minimum value would be determined by this need of protection. But there is another phase that enters, too—that of advertising. Cities and business men have learned by experience that street lighting is a powerful advertising medium. It is something on which they can capitalize; it is an investment that brings returns every single day of the year, winter and summer, spring and fall. The minimum values given in the table above, allow for a certain amount of extra light for advertising purposes. The maximum values, of course, will depend upon local conditions—the status of surrounding towns—the degree of inter-city rivalry, the amount of inter-zone rivalry within the city, etc.

Just as there are theatres of all sizes and varieties to satisfy human wants, so are there street lighting fixtures to suit any particular requiremens and any sized city purse. There are the large two—or three—unit ornamnetal standards such as are used in Saratoga, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Detroit, Augusta, Chicago, etc.; the single unit ornamental poles of the various designs and heights which are so common in the majority of our larger cities. The above poles may be classed as purely ornamental. Then, there are the more utilitarian type of units, combining cast iron trolley poles and brackets on which are mounted the ornamental lighting units. Finally, the less costly types of fixtures, and incidentally less ornamental, include what are known as center span units—mounted over the center of the street, and certain types of pendant units suspended from mast arms. All of these various types have been designed along scientific lines to give a certain definite result—a certain type of light distribution.

Of course, street lighting costs money. We are interested in seeing that the taxpayer gets the most value per dollar spent. You will find in this connection that a fewer number of high power lamps will be more economical and will give a better illuminating effect than a large number of low power lamps, even though there be the same total installed candlepower. This is true because of the higher efficiency of the larger lamps (they consume less energy per candlepower), because of the lower maintenance charges, and because of the better use of the road surface as a secondary light source.

This subject of street lighting is one in which theatre managers should be vitally interested. Their box office receipts will show the result of their activity for better street lighting. You may say that some rival theatre manager may benefit also because of your activity. That may be true. But you may be sure that neither of you will benefit under poor street lighting.

Watertown, Wisconsin.

Gentlemen:

Having recently purchased one of your Brandt Cashiers for my theater I want to express my appreciation of this wonderful little machine to you.

I used other small coin machines in my theaters until last Fall when I decided to buy one of your machines which I had held too expensive for the smaller theater but now after six months use I contend that no theater of any size at all can be without one.

It adds so much to the appearance of one's box office besides lending an air of dignity and business to the theater not counting the ease with which one can make change and the eliminating of mistakes at your box office.

As necessary to the operation of the up to date theater as the projector and I want to state now that I feel that I have gotten more for my money than any piece of equipment I have.

Yours very truly,

Bringing Them Into Town From the Outlying Districts

AN ingenious way of bringing business from the outlying districts to theatres located in the cities and larger sized towns was demonstrated, profitably for both parties to the co-operative arrangement, during the past winter by Laurence J. Carkey, at present manager of the Utica District of the Schine Theatrical Enterprises in Northern New York state.

At the time he executed the idea in which a bus company worked hand-in-hand with a picture theatre, Mr. Carkey was manager of the Avon theatre in Watertown and district manager of the northern district of the Schine Company. Of the many effective exploitation methods and promotion ideas Carkey executed at the period of his career, a career, by the way, which is marked by many splendid achievements in showmanship, the motor bus tie-up ranked ace hgh among them, and it brought considerable business to the Avon theatre in Watertown.

The tie-up was made with the Colonial Coach lines, Inc., following a conference between Mr. Carkey and Frank Phelan, general manager, and Allen Brady, field manager, of the bus lines. The Colonial company maintains general offices in Watertown and operates several lines through the smaller towns in that district of New York.

"I hit upon the plan as the most workable solution of the problem then facing the Avon theatre, which was that, owing to heavy snows and the condition of the roads, people in towns outside Watertown were not using their own automobiles, with the result that the transient trade from these outlying points came to an almost dead stop," Mr. Carkey told a representative of The Showman.

"Naturally with the loss or absences of these transients the theatre business was badly hit, and it became apparent that something must be done to bring into Watertown the visitors whose patronage was so important to the prosperity of the theatre and the merchants of the town as well.

"I called on the officials of the Colonial Coach Lines and stated my proposition to them. Both Mr. Whalen and Mr. Brady were interested in the project and entered into the tie-up with the theatre, which later proved profitable to both. We directed our efforts toward bringing into Watertown trade from a radius of 25 miles of the city.

"We immediately formulated plans to start regular excursion trips, which would leave villages and town within a 25 mile radius, every Thursday and Sunday night.

"Special representatives were assigned to each of the towns and it was their duty to look after our interests at their respective places. The representatives received a commission on the number of people that were carried to Watertown on the busses. Six such routes were laid out and within a short time the plan was working in a manner most gratifying to us.

"The bus fare paid by the patron for these excursions included the price of admission to the theatre. This plan thus saved considerable congestion at the box office, due to the arrival of people in bus load lots. Following the performance the patrons were transported back to their home towns.

"The experience in this case was so satisfactory that I believe a co-operative arrangement of this kind between a theatre, located as is the Avon in Watertown, and the transportation company offers possibilities that might profitably be applied on a much wider scale than is now attempted."

Mr. Carkey has been connected with the Schine company for five years and during that time has had the distinction of opening over twenty theatres for the concern. Some of the big houses operated by the Schines and which were opened by Mr. Carkey are the Liberty at Herkimer, the Rialto at Little Falls, the Avon and Olympic at Watertown.

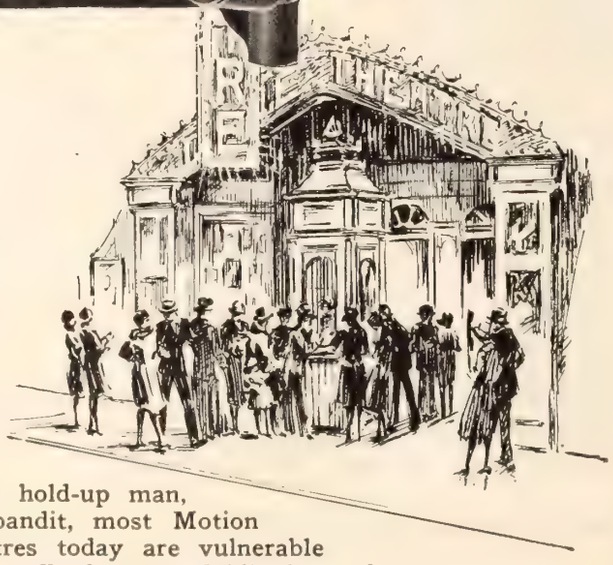
Solves Parking Problem by Arrangement With Garage

Solving the automobile parking problem of the patrons of three downtown Wilmer & Vincent theatres, located close together in the business section of Harrisburg, C. Floyd Hopkins, head of the company's theatres in that city, has entered into an arrangement with a large garage, nearby, known as the Downtown Garage, at Fourth and Chestnut streets, which gives persons attending any one of the theatres the opportunity to store their cars indefinitely during the periods of performances. Previously the theatre patrons had much difficulty finding parking space, having often to leave their cars three or four blocks from a theatre and walk to the show, after a tedious hunt for parking space.

Under the new arrangement patrons know they are sure of space in the garage where provision also is made to sell them tickets to one of the three theatres—the Colonial, Victoria, and State—at current box office rates.

The plans was announced in newspaper advertisements and in notices on the screens which state:



"Owing to the difficulty our patrons have in finding parking space Wilmer & Vincent's State, Colonial and Victoria theatres have arranged with the Downtown Garage to properly house your cars while you are in the theatre. The service is free up until 6 o'clock in the evening. and costs you only 25 cents for four hours after 6 o'clock. For your convenience you may drive direct to the Downtown Garage and purchase tickets there at the regular box office prices.

THOSE nickels, dimes and dollars that you take in today are a lure that the burglar cannot resist. Today and tomorrow, cash is coming in—what are you doing to protect it?

It's YOUR Cash!

---but for how long?

PREY for every hold-up man, burglar and bandit, most Motion Picture Theatres today are vulnerable and weak. Can you afford to stand idly by and watch your hard earned dollars be stolen?

Before you can deposit your cash in the bank—that's when your chances of losing it are greatest.

For over forty years York has built vaults for the country's finest banks. In this Burglary Chest it has built the experience of these years, the knowledge of its craftsmen.

proof of this we have the records of theatre robberies showing that there are more hold-up attempts following a holiday—during which, of course, the theatre chest contains receipts for two or more days owing to the closing of banks—than at any other time.

If the theatre man has not adequate protection for the safe storing of his receipts he is courting a situation which may cost him the entire returns for one, two or even three days—as holidays falling on a Monday cause the holding in the theatre of the box office take for Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

One of the newest developments in thief-proof safes is the York Round Door Burglary Chest in a regular York Fire-Resisting Safe, which gives the added protection against loss by fire of valuable books and papers.

One of the leading features of this York safe is the standardization of parts, which are interchangeable. New parts can be obtained and are easily installed, as every working part of the chest is of simple design and operation. This factor is an important one working for economy in the event that attempted raids on the chest result in breakage of the handle or other parts.

Another feature of the York Chest is the simple adjustment of the crane hinge, supporting the door of the chest. Should this be out of line either because of an attack on the chest or other cause, it may be quickly straightened by adjusting the nut at the top of the hinge, whereas hinges held in alignment with babbitt metal must be adjusted at the factory, necessitating costly shipments and delays. Even if the combination dial should be knocked off, the safe may still be opened. An exclusive feature of the York Chest is the combination adjustment, under the regular dial, so that the chest may be opened with the regular combination even under these conditions.

The SYNCROVERTOR Will Reduce Your Current Cost of Projection Fully 25%

ONE of the many satisfied users of the Liberty Syncrovertor writes:

"The Liberty Syncrovertor is a little giant, so small and simple, yet powerful and dependable, and it needs so little attention in return for service it gives, that one is inclined to almost forget its presence in the projection room." Thus writes the Thurston Theatre in Rochester who have been using the Syncrovertor for over eighteen months.

Motion picture theatre owners—present and prospective extending from one end of the country to the other, are being attracted by the revolutionary step in current conversion methods as demonstrated in the Liberty Syncrovertor.

This highly efficient device consists of a transformer, a motor, a commutator, a switchboard control panel, all assembled in one unit or with separate control panel. The actual rectification is done at the commutator—not within the motor.

The transformer of the Syncrovertor is the machine's own emergency unit. If the motor ceased to function, the transformer would furnish A. C. current of the proper voltage to the arc.

Write us and let us tell you how you can save 25% in the cost of your projection.

Cooperative Publicity Between Public Library and the Motion Picture Theatre

of the value of cooperating with the films be shows is advised to secure samples of library-film bookmarks. These may be obtained by writing to Mrs. Ina Roberts, Publicity Representative, Cleveland Public Library. Available also are copies of a list of magazine articles dealing with library-film cooperation.

This cooperation, it may be explained, consists of much more than mere publicity; it represents a wide and deep knowledge, long experience in librarianship, also vision and enthusiasm. The Cleveland Library-film cooperation has been peculiarly happy in having these furnished in abundance.

The library editor, Mrs. Julia Harron, has gained from years of writing reviews of books for the Cleveland Library publication, "The Open Shelf," a mind richly filled with the colorful pageantry of events and an understanding of books and their readers. To see an outstanding and well executed film with Mrs. Harron is a treat because of her ability to appreciate to the full the care taken by everyone concerned in its making to have the period material accurate and to pick out the books that will serve to illumine and increase the enjoyment of the film.

Miss Marilla Waite Freeman, librarian of Cleveland's Main Library, gives much to that institution's film cooperation through her boundless enthusiasm and a progressive spirit given restraint and direction by her library experience and an undestanding of library aims and provinces. Miss Freeman represents the American Library Association on Mr. Hays' committee and is also a member of the American Library Association Committee on the proposed distributing educational film through libraries.

The publicity representative, whose agreeable duty it is to bring the library and the film world closer together through mutual understanding, has been fortunate also in that the head of history, travel and biography (combined in one division) in Cleveland's Main Library, possesses the too-seldom-met combination of a mind erudite by training and inclination yet also extremely open to the popular point of view. Miss Louise Boutelle, head of the History, Biography and Travel Division, presiding over an important collection of history books that include the histories of the largest countries in the language of each as well as in English, yet finds time to watch for the popularly written yet authoritative histories, biographies and travel books that illumine films that in turn help readers to visualize what the books contain.

Serves Welfare of Patrons

The desire of the Cleveland Public Library to have its books serve vitally the welfare of its patrons has led to the systematized effort to add to each current event, each phase of public and private life its list of connecting books. This effort has resulted in the installation of a curator of exhibits whose time and that of his assistants is given to arranging exhibits within and without the library. Mr. Albert Young is a thoroughly equipped artist, whose part in film cooperation consists in combining and presenting in exhibits film stills and library pictures and books in such a way as to attract and hold attention and to make vivid and attractive their relation to each other.

Miss Ruth Wilcox, head of the Fine Arts Division, is, because of her expert knowledge of fine arts books and their relative value, adept in choosing the right library material to be combined with stills in exhibits. She is one of many throughout the Cleveland system who contribute the "little added somethings" that give distinction and a scholarly touch as well as current interest to library-film exhibits. In the "Monte Cristo" exhibit this was a selection of colored prints of the France of the nineteenth century; in "La Bohème" it was a book opened at a reproduction of a page of the original manu-

Theatre Aids Traffic Committee With Film to Promote Safe Driving

Scenario Contest Aligns Rowland and Clark Houses with Important Civic Movement in Pittsburgh

FIFTY-EIGHT columns of legitimate newspaper space was the reward of Harold B. Dygert, director of advertising and publicity for the Stanley-Davis-Clark theatres at Pittsburgh, Pa., when he tied up with the city traffic committee on a three-way publicity campaign.

Daily front page and inside newspaper stories, over a period of two months, besides the institutional publicity derived, featured the stunt, which set the pace for all future exhibitor exploitation in Western Pennsylvania.

The campaign came about when Mayor Kline appointed a Traffic Committee to reduce accidents through general publicity. The committee decided to make a motion picture, pointing out the fatal results of careless driving, and to have it exhibited in the local theatres—and approached Dygert on the production of the film.

Dygert took the matter up with the Pittsburgh Press, and they agreed to join in the campaign. The first step was to announce a SCENARIO CONTEST, offering $275 in cash prizes and fifty sets of theatre tickets, to the persons sending in the best general idea for a scenario on the subject of Traffic Violations, etc. The story broke on the first page, and stayed there.

Another angle was the production of the scenario, to be made in Pittsburgh, and to be exhibited in the Stanley-Davis-Clark theatres, full credit going to the person sending in the winning idea for the scenario. Up to the end of this first phase of the campaign, the stunt netted approximately twenty-five columns of space, inside and front page, and public interest was keen.

The stunt was going so well at this time that it was decided to announce a second contest, to select the local talent to play in the picture. The next day photographs poured in—and in addition to other feature stories on the drive, the Press printed two full-page layouts of photographs entered in the contest.

After the contest had run another month, the winners were announced, and screen tests given eighteen, from which the final selections were made. The continuity was written by Dygert from the idea submitted, and the story filmed by Motion Picture Producers Corporation at their local studio.

Meantime the Press was covering the filming of the picture from a news angle, and running two and three column stories daily, with Sunday picture layouts in addition.

"The Traffic Committee was as pleased as anyone," Dygert said, "since they would have had to pay for making the picture anyway. Through our connection with the campaign, they receive a distribution of over 200,000 on the screens of our theatres. One of the best angles to the idea is the fact that it can be put over successfully anywhere—and also the fact that there is no expense to the exhibitor. The prizes were offered by the Traffic Committee, and the production was made at their expense. Our total investment was the supervision of the contests, screen tests, and the production, and using the film in our theatres."

Fire Prevention As A Safeguard For Patrons First Concern Of Showmen

Finds Demand for Fire Prevention Device Based More On Service Than Economic Considerations

THE desire to safeguard patrons takes precedence over considerations of property protection and lowered fire insurance rates on the part of exhibitors who have installed the Sentry Safety Control—a fire prevention device for projectors—according to Jos. E. Cohen, chairman of the board of the Sentry Safety Control Corporation.

"While, as in any business, the economic value of any device is fundamental, it is a striking manifestation of the desire of exhibitors to serve the public, that the demand we have had for the Sentry Control is based more upon the grounds of service to the patrons than property protection to the theatre man," Mr. Cohen said in a statement issued last week.

"The possibility of fire is the bugaboo of theatre owners and managers, not so much out of concern for their investment as it is for safety of their patrons, especially children."

The Sentry Safety Control, which was described in the New and Improved Equipment department of the June issue of The Showman, is an automatic device installed on the projector in which an electrically operated douser cuts off the light beam at any stoppage of the film from any cause.

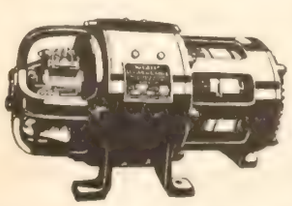
The company which developed the device and is marketing it, is now expanding operations to supply theatres all over the world. Until fairly recently the company has confined its activities mostly to the Philadelphia territory, as it was there that the invention was developed. Administrative offices of the corporation are maintained in Philadelphia and New York, but distribution, installation and servicing will be available in all parts of the country, both through representatives of the Sentry Safety Control Corporation and through the National Theatre Supply Co., which recently contracted to act in a distribution capacity for the apparatus.

Plans are now being worked out for the distribution of the Control in foreign countries.

The device has been approved by the Underwriters Laboratory, where it is said to have successfully passed a series of 230,000 tests. It meets the full requirements of regulations governing motion picture theatres recently established in the State of Kentucky, the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and the City of Camden, N. J.

The corporation provides the services of an insurance engineer to analyze rates of theatres which install the device. This is a free service maintained by the company. The range of saving effected through this new equipment is from 10 cents per thousand to 10 dollars per thousand, in accordance with the individual conditions of the theatre regarding building construction and equipment.

In view of statement issued early in the summer by the National Theatre Supply Company, that the majority of trouble calls for emergency equipment and service at supply branches were due to fires in the projection booth, there is an added economic factor to be considered in scientific methods for fire prevention.



However, the attitude of theatre men, though well aware of the serious losses they face by reason of fire, is that above and beyond that factor is their duty to the public in the matter of preventive measures and equipment. The sentiment which Mr. Cohen says is typical of all the theatre men who have sought information regarding the Sentry Safety Control was expressed by M. E. Comerford, head of the theatre circuit bearing his name, in his statement to the company, "We have adopted the Sentry Safety Control because it is the greatest desire of my organization to safeguard the lives of our patrons."

script of Puccini's opera; in "Annie Laurie" prints and photographs of the places and historic persons features; in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" it was the titles of the books that tell of what is left of the Paris of that period.

It is rather amazing—the power of moving pictures to make the past live for us, which is a very different thing from merely telling about it or even showing it on the screen; it is in this vivifying the life of our own and other times that books and films can each supplement the other; to what extent I do not believe we have as yet even guessed.

U. A. Theatre in Seattle Renamed "Liberty"

An important change in the first run situation was announced in Seattle, Washington, last week by Herschel B. Stuart, newly-appointed general manager of the West Coast houses in the Pacific Northwest territory. Under the new plan, the present United Artists Theatre will abandon that title this week and will return to the former "Liberty Theatre" name, while the present Coliseum Theatre will become the new United Artists Theatre and the "Coliseum," after twelve years as Seattle's premier house, will be no more, at least in name.

The West Coast house in Seattle's University district, named "The Liberty" when the United Artists Theatre became a reality last fall, will again return to its old name, "The Neptune."

Agree to Wage Scale of Northwest T. O.

A committee of the Musicians' Union of Minneapolis and St. Paul has finally, after many conferences, come to an agreement with the wage scale committee of the Theatre Owners' Association of the Northwest and new contracts have been signed for the period of one year. The new agreement has no material changes over that of last year and the scale is to remain the same. The exhibitors were unsuccessful in their effort to have the agreement of eight months' duration.

Garden, Milwaukee, Sold to L. K. Brin of Seattle

The Garden Theatre, one of Milwaukee's five first run motion picture theatres, was sold to Leonard K. Brin of Seattle, Wash., by the Uihlein interests, change in management to be effective on August 27th. Ed. Tunstall has been managing the Garden for the past few years. Mr. Brin is contemplating the installation of the Vitaphone.

Proposes to Solidify New England T. O.

AFTER completing the preliminary work of his projected nation-wide organizing campaign, President R. F. Woodhull of the M. P. T. O. A. left for Boston this week where he is to attend a conference of Theatre Owners at the Hotel Statler.

It is Mr. Woodhull's purpose to solidify the Theatre Owners organizations in the different New England states. Connecticut now has an excellent organization with Arthur Lockwood President and Edward Levy Manager and Secretary. Rhode Island is well organized under E. M. Fay's leadership.

The organizations in Massachusetts, Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire are to be strengthened in every way.

President Woodhull will extend his organization energies in other directions as soon as the Massachusetts and New England campaign is finished. National Director Nathan Yemins of Fall River, Chairman of the Administrative Committee, Joseph W. Walsh of Hartford and National Treasurer L. M. Sagal of New Haven are cooperating with Mr. Woodhull in this organizing work.

135 Western N. Y. and Ohio Theatres in Booking Combine

CHARLES L. CASANAVE, president of Associated Theatres of Ohio, announced in Cleveland this week, that he had completed his affiliation with Theatrical Utilities Corporation of Buffalo headed by N. Dipson, whereby the combined companies will render booking service to 135 independent theatres in Western New York and Ohio. The temporary embargo placed by the national distributors on centralized booking companies has been lifted, it is stated, with the assurance by these exhibitor companies that their policy offers a legitimate service for the protection of independently-owned theatre property rather than a price cutting campaign.

Casanave states that the independently-owned theatre property in Ohio alone is valued at $50,000,000. His company and the Buffalo company will render booking and exploitation service to a degree of efficiency, according to Casanave, equal to the largest chain theatre operators in the industry. Affiliated Theatres of Ohio, now located in the Film Exchange Bldg., Cleveland, contemplates opening new offices in another location very shortly.

Hearing Closes Against West Coast Theatres

Government Decision in Long-Drawn-Out Hearing Is Expected This Winter

THE case of the Federal Trade Commission against West Coast Theatres and others charging unfair trade practices in the operation of theatres in California was concluded during the week and a decision will probably be forthcoming some time shortly after the first of the year. The defendants will proceed with the preparation of briefs for examination by the Commission before the decision is rendered.

The case against West Coast and co-defendants was embodied in two complaints which were prosecuted jointly. The proceedings started May 29th, 1925. In one of these complaints the defendants named were West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California; the T. & D. Jr. Enterprises, Inc.; Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainments, Inc., and N. M. Turner, Fred Dahnken, C. L. Langley, and F. W. Livingston, partners doing business under the name of Turner, Dahnken & Langley.

All of the foregoing were charged with having conspired together for the purpose of hindering, restraining and preventing producers and distributors in other states from leasing their films to competitors of respondents and with having made agreements as to competition between themselves in the exhibition of films.

The second complaint named West Coast Theatres, Inc.; West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California; Venice Amusement Company; Hollywood Theatres, Inc.; All Star Feature Distributors, Inc.; Educational Film Exchange; Principal Pictures Corp., and the partners, N. M. Turner, Fred Dahnken, C. L. Langley and F. W. Livingston, operating as Turner, Dahnken and Langley, and A. L. Gore, Michael Gore, Sol Lesser, Adolph Ramish and Dave Bershon. They, too, are charged with having conspired to hinder, restrain and prevent outside producers or distributors from leasing their films to competitors.

Taking of testimony on the west coast in the joint charges was conducted at various times until about two months ago. At that time the Herbert L. Rothchild Enterprises, Inc., one of the respondents, applied to have the hearing transferred to New York for the testimony of Jack Partington and Sam Dembew, both of Publix.

These were the final two witnesses at the hearing held in New York during the week. Dembow was examined by William Mallard, New York attorney for the respondent, and cross examined by J. Edwin Rowland, district attorney for the Government. He testified that he bought product for the Rothchild Theatres in San Francisco from the fall of 1923 to 1925 and that so far as he knew no agreement existed between West Coast and Rothchild. The testimony of Partington corroborated that of Dembow in every particular.

Kansas Theatres Again Damaged by Flood Waters

Flood disaster again has befallen exhibitors in many sections of Kansas. In Herington, Council Grove and many other towns of that state the streets are covered with from three to four feet of water. The towns hardest hit are located along the Neosho River. In several towns the floors and chairs in motion picture theatres virtually have been wrecked, although detail of the total damage has not been learned, the crest of the flood having been reached this week. No official action has yet been taken, but individual members of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri are contemplating a relief campaign to aid the unfortunate exhibitors, as well as the citizens of many towns.

New Mid-West Pool Brings Together Big Circuits in September

A POOL of Mid-West motion picture circuits, which will bring together the Fitzpatrick and McElroy and the Butterfield chains is said to be about consumated and will probably be in operation shortly after the 1st of September. The F. and M. circuit operates out of Chicago and includes about forty theatres, with a substantial interest in the concern being owned by B. & K.

Publix owns a quarter interest in the Butterfield chain, which embraces fifty theatres, all in Michigan. The pool arranged for booking purposes is a strategic one, with the circuits operating in an interlocking Michigan territory.

The F. and M. circuit houses are located in Adrian, Alpena, Benton Harbor, Big Rapids, Cadillac, Ludington, Manistee, Three Rivers, Traverse City, and St. Joe in Michigan; Muncie and Richmond in Indiana; Blue Island, Chicago Heights and Harvey in Illinois, and Marinette in Wisconsin.

The Butterfield theatres are located in the following towns: Ann Arbor, Battle Creek, Bay City, Flint, Grand Rapids, Hillsdale, Jackson, Lansing, Niles, Owosso, Pontiac, Port Huron, Saginaw and Ypsilanti.

Extended Protection Is Hotly Contested

Missouri M. P. T. O. Unanimously Opposed to It; Other States Debate Problem

THE proposition of protection on pictures is assuming proportions little expected when the controversy first got under way. Everywhere it is resulting in meetings of exhibitors, indignant and otherwise. Ruin is predicted for many if extended protection is granted, many are claiming, while others are contending that the larger houses must have protection from the shooting galleries.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, meeting at the Elks' Club, St. Louis, Mo., on Tuesday, August 16, unanimously went on record as opposed to unreasonable protection for any motion picture theatre, first run, second run or neighborhood, and also took a definite stand as against Forced Block Booking.

The meeting, which was the first held by the theatre owners since their annual convention on May 24, was attended by the representatives of almost 200 independently operated motion pictures in Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois.

The question of protection was the big problem before the gathering. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois some time ago in co-operation with a special committee of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade worked out what was believed to be an equitable zoning plan which was submitted to a committee of the producers and distributors at New York, but to date this plan has not been put into effect. As a result the independently operated theatres are refusing to sign contracts for motion pictures.

At the executive session of the exhibitors and also at the dinner at noon time, which was attended by the representatives of many of the film exchanges, it was revealed that some of the film companies have not placed a contract for the new season in St. Louis.

It was brought out that Skouras Brothers Enterprises, which controls three of the city's first run houses, and also the St. Louis Amusement Company, with some thirty neighborhood houses, are seeking 28 days' protection for first runs, 14 days' protection for all subsequent runs and at least four months' protection against houses charging 5 and 10 cents admission.

However, the discussion also brought to light the fact that Skouras Brothers were not alone in demanding long-term protection. Film exchange managers and exhibitors revealed that in some instances exhibitors in towns adjacent to St. Louis who have objected very strenuously to the granting 28 days' protection to the Skouras houses on first run showing have in turn demanded as high as 45 to 90 days' protection over houses in not only their own towns, but in some instances to so-called rival houses 15 and 20 miles distant.

Fred Wehrenberg, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, who presided at both the dinner and the executive session of the association, stated that he felt that 28 days' protection for first run houses was equitable, and that 14 days was fair protection for the second runs and that 7 days should be ample leeway on all subsequent runs.

At the executive session of the exhibitors it was agreed that the fight for an equitable zone plan should not be dropped until his objective has been attained.

Members of the organization have been advised not to sign any contracts for new film until October unless it is absolutely necessary to do so, and that if they do find new film is needed to sign up with independent exchanges that will grant equitable protection to all contract signers.

J. P. Wood, business manager of the Ohio state exhibitor body, says the Ohio exhibitors are showing great concern over the matter of protection for large chain theatres. He says theatre owners in Ohio are faced with the same conditions as those existing in Illinois, where B. & K., by virtue of their holdings, secure unusual protection over competitors not only in Chicago, but in many counties throughout the state.

Wood says one large producer-owned theatre is displaying twenty-four sheets for sixty miles in different directions and has asked for protection in a circle covering a radius of forty miles from the city in which it operates. If this is permitted, it is contended, it will cause financial ruin to many exhibitors.

At a meeting attended by Joseph Stern, representing Stanley-Fabian Corp., operating in New Jersey, and a committee from the Jersey M. P. T. O., consisting of Joseph M. Seider, president, Ben Harris and Louis Gold, Stern declared the Stanley-Fabian Corp. will not require any longer protection than it has obtained in the past. The M. P. T. O. asked Stanley-Fabian to confer when the latter were reported to have requested 60 days' protection, or more, against theatres that run subsequently to those owned by that corporation.

Pathe-De Mille Plans Greater Studio

The recent fire at the DeMille studio that ravaged the property room ruined Stage 6 and also damaged Stage 3, caused no interruption in De Mille production schedule. No time was lost by the producing units, who resumed work the day following the conflagration. Actual space loss by fire amounted to less than 18 feet.

Reconstruction plans were at once pushed forward at the De Mille studio. William Sistrom, the organization's general manager, A. G. Volck, his assistant, and George Berthelon conferred on plans to replace the ruined stages, machinery and other injured equipment.

Harry Lachman Resigns as Ingram Official

Harry Lachman, for three years general manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Rex Ingram productions abroad, has resigned his position and will devote his entire time to the filming of his "Travelaughs" series of comic travelogues. Lachman is constructing a studio at St. Andre de Nice to house all his production units

Jannings Signs New Paramount Contract

The one year optional contract that Paramount had on the services of Emil Jannings was taken up last week at the Paramount studio on the Coast and a new agreement signed by the German star calling for him to make four feature pictures a year. The new long term contract following the completion of a new Jannings vehicle, "Hitting for Heaven."

Labor Dispute Closes Schine House

WITH the final conference between Schine representatives and the Albany union of musicians, stage hands and operators failing to come to a satisfactory conclusion, the Avon Theatre, a long run house in Watertown, was ordered closed for an indefinite period and its bookings for "Beau Geste," "What Price Glory" and "The King of Kings" ordered cancelled. The Schine officials made public a statement to the effect that the demand of the union was most unjust and that if the increases were granted, it would be necessary to jump admission prices at the theatre. Rather than do this it was decided to close the Avon.

New German Slow Motion Picture Invention

A device has recently been invented and patented in Germany which permits an enormous increase in the number of exposures made per second, according to advices received in the Motion Picture Section of the Department of Commerce from Trade Commissioner Geo. R. Canty, Paris. This invention permits taking as high as 48,000 different exposures per second. However, special apparatus must be used for such high speeds while with a normal machine costing $350 to manufacture up to 8,000 pictures every second can be obtained.

A tremendous field of application will be found for the invention in scientific and experimental work. There are certain very fast operations absolutely beyond the human eye and ordinary film photography, where a scientific investigation of the happenings at such high speeds has created an actual demand for high-speed photography.

Six Films Emerging from F. N.'s Cutting Rooms

Six pictures completed and in the cutting room of the First National studio at Burbank include "The Drop Kick," "American Beauty," "The Red Raiders," "The Lfie of Riley," "Rose of the Golden West," and "The Crystal Cup." Twelve pictures are either in production or are about to be started at the studio. They include "I'll Tell the World," "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," "No Place to Go," "The Gorilla," "Home Made," "Gun Gospel," "Man Crazy," "The Texas Steer," "The Shepherd of the Hills," "The Valley of the Giants," "Louisiana" and a Harry Langdon comedy, untitled.

Chaplin to Resume Work on "Circus" in September

Charles Chaplin will resume production on "The Circus" in September, according to Arthur W. Kelly, United Artists vice-president and general manager of foreign distribution, who has just returned to the United Artists home office after a fortnight spent in Los Angeles consulting with Joseph M. Schenck. The bulk of the shooting has been done and Chaplin has arranged to finish the "odds and ends" at the studio in Hollywood, which is again a scene of activity.

Poor Season Is Predicted for Germany

Analysis Shows 50% of Pictures Cannot be Digested by Market

By Heinrich Fraenkel

Berlin Correspondent, Motion Picture News

GENERALLY speaking, the German distributors' situation, as far as the ensuing season is concerned, can be considered worse than ever it was, the main reason for this state of things being the simple fact that more than 50 per cent of the pictures offered cannot possibly be digested by the market.

According to some highely interesting figures published by H. U. Brachvogel in L. B. B., there are altogether 4,293 moving picture theatres registered in this country. It has to be borne in mind, however, that as much as 91 per cent of the total are small theatres up to 600 seats. Fifty-eight, 5 per cent of the total, has a capacity of less than 300 seats only. Furthermore it must be considered that only 200 of all the German theatres can afford to run a picture a whole week. No less than 1,600 change their program twice a week, and 5,200, many of which are not continuously opened, even oftener.

At a conservative estimate the whole German market has a capacity of 9,400 play-dates per week, which, accounting for closing time, renovations, etc., results in a maximum of 470,000 play-dates a year. In view of the fact, however, that at least 33 per cent must be accounted for running and old productions, it is an undeniable fact that no more than 300,000 play-dates will be opened for the distributor in the ensuing season.

According to the statistics of a big German distributor it takes roughly 900 bookings to properly exploit the average feature, recuperating production cost and overhead with a reasonable profit. Here is the analysis: 15 theatres yielding Mks. 1500 and more; 31 theatres, Mks. 750-1500; 67 theatres, Mks. 400-750; 156 theatres Mks. 200-400; 361 theatres, Mks. 80-200; 227 theatres under and up to Mks. 80. Thus the Mks. 200 required for the exploitation of the average German feature are collected.

Now in order to properly exploit each picture within the given possibilities of play time, it stands to reason that no more than 360 pictures ought to be offered on the market.

The pictures actually offered so far, however, amount to 580 already, which means that there will be a tremendous competition for each play date and that no pictures, except the absolute knock-outs, will possibly stand the slightest chance of being properly exploited.

One does not need to be gifted with prophecy to foresee under these circumstances a very bad season for every distributing organization in this country as well as for many German producers who are dependent on regular advances and remittances from their distributors. Increase of exports seems to be the only hope for many companies to keep alive during and over this critical situation.

World's Record for "Glory"

Roxy Grosses $144,267 for Week; Late Figures Indicate Record for Hold-Over

AFTER making a world's record for a week's theatre receipts for the seven days beginning Saturday, Aug. 13, and ending Friday, Aug. 19, running up a grand total of $144,267, "What Price Glory" broke its previous week end record by $1,000 as it went into its second week at the Roxy Theatre, New York City. Last Easter week was the nearest that this theatre came to these record figures when another Fox picture, "Ankles Preferred," grossed in the neighborhood of $130,000. In the point of attendance, "Glory" far outstripped its rival, making a new record of 175,866 paid admissions as against 150,652 for the Easter showing.

A most remarkable fact in the case of "What Price Glory" is that as shown at the Roxy Theatre with prologue and symphony orchestra it has attracted in ten days about the same number of patrons that it did during its six months' run at the Harris Theatre.

The prelude lasts twenty-five minutes and contains sixteen short, snappy numbers. "Roxy" has caught the happy-go-lucky spirit of the American soldier off duty in France and has woven into his stage picture the songs of the A.E.F. and their French comrades. There are a dozen soloists taken from "Roxy's" gang. There are choruses and dances and at the close a thrilling tableau.

"The large motion picture theatre," Mr. Rothafel contends, "depends as much on its stage presentations as on its pictures for success. Without appropriate surroundings and musical accompaniment, the best pictures often fail to attract a large public."

Texas M.P.T.O. Award for F. N. Picture

THE M. P. T. O. of Texas has chosen First National's "Smile, Brother, Smile" as the Texas "Blue Ribbon Award" for the month of August. The idea of choosing certain pictures for awards was started several months ago. The previous awards from the Texas M. P. T. O. unit went to "Painting the Town," "Tillie the Toiler," "Let It Rain" and "Rookies."

"Les Miserables"

VICTOR HUGO'S classic, screened in France and brought here by Universal, opened at the Central Theatre, New York, this week and is doing fine business.

The response of the public is little short of amazing, because the picture itself is much inferior to American production standards. Made originally in thirty reels, then cut to eighteen, and finally to eleven for the New York engagement, the film presented almost impossible difficulties in editing.

But the job was done—and very well done indeed—considering the problem presented. The version which will go to the exhibitor is in eight reels and this further condensation improves it.

The picture has many faults, all of which could be enumerated here, but to what purpose? Much more important is it to look beneath the surface for the reason why the public is flocking to see it in New York.

Frankly, after seeing the picture we were puzzled by the business it is doing. We put the question to one of the canniest observers in the industry and he sized it up this way:

"It's on account of the book itself. They're coming to see Victor Hugo's great novel on the screen, because they have all read it. The trouble with us in the picture business is that we forget that people do read books nowadays—and the classics, too."

Victor Hugo is still being read. The picture, whatever its shortcomings, is Hugo's work sincerely and very humanly screened. That, to us, is the real news about this film. W. A. J.

Chain Is Salvation Of Showman, Says Vet.

Declares Houses Must Be Welded Together and Operate on Facts and Figures

A. B. MOMAND, President of the Momand Enterprises of Oklahoma, declares in an article in Motion Picture Journal, that the chain is the salvation of the showman. He says that those who will survive are the ones welded into powerful chains that operate on facts and figures. Mr. Momand is a veteran exhibitor. His article in part follows:

"Buying films at what they are actually worth will always be the keynote of the theatre owner's success.

"The producer-distributor reaps the benefit of all the ability devoted to theatre business whenever the theatre owner pays excessive rentals. So, it comes down to organization in the operation of theatres. Theatre businesses reduced to a definite concrete formula, operated upon facts and the most improved accounting methods, are necessary if theatre owners are to succeed, and these are hardly possible of achievement by the individual operator.

"Those of us who will survive must be welded into powerful chains in order that each and every unit of the chain will have the advantage of these methods—and these are thoughts that should interest the theatre owner more than, 'whether or not the price of cotton will be a little better this year than last.'

"Crop prospects are slightly in advance of last year as regarding the cotton and other row crops. The weevil and flea, under present circumstances, while it is hot and dry, will not infest the crop so badly. In many counties in this section, however, the pests have dug deep into the pocket books of many unfortunate farmers who received too much rain.

"My advice to showmen who would succeed is: To buy their film carefully and slowly; organize their institution into a perfect, cooperating machine, giving you the utmost in their make-up; organize into a sound, constructive combine of theatres, if possible; eliminate waste of presentation and music preludes by carefully planned programs each week.

—"and, by giving your theatre your entire time, from the time the 'Big Ben' awakes you in the morning, until you make the house dark that night, it is probable that your existence is assured, for some time as least."

Sir Henry and Lady Cowan Encourage Production

Among distinguished visitors in Canada have been Sir Henry Cowan, member of the British House of Commons, and Lady Cowan, both of whom are interested in the control and guidance of British Empire-made films, to the exclusion of others.

Lady Cowan is chairman of the British Film Committee of Patriotic Societies, while Sir Henry heads the British Association of Film Directors and claims the credit for sponsoring the film quota bill in the British Parliament.

The Cowans have held conference with leading moving picture enthusiasts in various Canadian cities with a view to encouraging the cause of British pictures, and it is their hope that Canadian organizations will press for a film quota bill in the Canadian House of Commons, Ottawa, at the next session.

Quebec Theatre Report to Be Issued on Sept. 1

The report of the Royal Investigation into moving picture theatre conditions in the Province of Quebec will be released at Montreal on September 1, it has been announced by Mr. Justice Boyer, who conducted the inquiry over a period of two months.

The report will embody recommendations regarding the operation of theatres, the suggestions being sent on to the Quebec Provincial Government for action. Among other things, the request was made before the Commission by numerous religious bodies that all theatres be closed on Sundays. It is already intimated that no action will be taken along this line.

Structural improvements in smaller theatres will be recommended, it is understood, and the question of the presence of police and firemen at performances will be settled.

W. H. Rife, Pioneer Pa. Exhibitor, Dies

William H. Rife, accredited with having been the first exhibitor to show motion pictures out-of-doors in Pennsylvania, and one of the first two men to bring movies to Harrisburg, died at his home in that city on August 19, in his sixty-first year.

Mr. Raife was former proprietor of the Rife Hotel, Walnut Street, Harrisburg, and he introduced movies in a beer garden he operated, adjoining the hotel in 1904. It was in the same year that Peter Magaro, veteran Harrisburg exhibitor, opened the city's first picture theatre.

For a number of years the Rife Garden was one of the most popular resorts in the Pennsylvania Capital City. The pictures were shown free, but only to persons who sat around the tables and patronized the bar, the garden being enclosed by a high wall.

Services Commemorate Valentino's Death

HIS colleagues in Hollywood and his friends in the motion picture industry paid silent tribute to the memory of Rudolph Valentino, who died one year ago at the Polyclinic Hospital, New York City. With the celebration of a memorial mass in the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Hollywood, at 10.30 A. M., and five minutes of silent prayer from all executives and employees in the United Artists' Hollywood and New York offices, Tuesday, August 23, the anniversary of the star's death was observed. Friends of the late actor placed wreaths on the crypt containing his ashes in the Hollywood Cemetery.

The celebrant, deacon and subdeacon of the requiem mass were respectively, Fathers Galli, Tonelli and Pilolli. The chief usher at the services was Sylvano Balboni, widower of the late June Mathis, who discovered Valentino. The Italian Government was represented by Count Grandinego, Italian vice-consul. Fred Beetson represented Will H. Hays. Hollywood's envoy at the mass was Harry Barratt of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce.

Two Episodes of Rainbow Pictures Completed

THIS week saw the completion of two of the six episodes of the first Rainbow production which Lars Moen is producing at the Cosmopolitan studio in New York for the North American Society of Arts, Inc. New foreign methods of the photography of colored objects are being employed in the production of this series, which are to be done in technicolor. Edna Murphy is being starred.

The cast announced last Saturday will have Walter Tennuson, as leading man, Mabel Swor, in the second feminine lead, and Louis Dayton, Herbert Fortiers, Louise Peters, Myra Brooks and Kittens Reichert.

A large portion of the series is devoted to fashion show sequences and for these scenes Mr. Moen acquired fifteen girls from the Follies, the Scandals and other sources of pulchritude.

Minnesota Rules Drastic for Traveling Shows

It will be practically impossible for the itinerant show to operate in Minnesota on a profitable basis henceforth, as a result of new drastic regulations issued by George W. Wells, Jr., state fire marshal. A permit must now be applied for ten days before a showing and details must be given a deputy fire marshal or agent of the apparatus to be used and location of the machine, which must not be placed within a radius of 30 feet of any building. A fee of $5 is charged for each performance and the showman must be bonded to the satisfaction of the fire marshal's office.

Minneapolis Expects New Policy for Taking Films

When the board of equalization held its final meeting of the year the latter part of July it asked representatives of several motion picture film exchanges around Minneapolis to be present to discuss the method of assessing motion picture films held in the city for storage and rental purposes. It was explained to the board that the film is valued at about $25 a reel and that it has a rental value of from $10 to $1,000 a day. Some of the exchanges average from 700 to 1,200 films daily in storage.

New Title for Negri Paramount Vehicle

"Begged of Love" has been substituted for "Sun Kissed" as the title of Pola Negri's new Paramount picture now in the company's cutting rooms in Hollywood under the scissors of its director, Rowland V. Lee. Kenneth Thompson and Jean Hersholt support the star.

"The Gay Defender" will be the title of Richard Dix's next Paramount picture. The star's latest, "Shanghai Bound," leaves the cutters' hands inside of a few weeks.

The title of Esther Ralston's latest romantic comedy has been changed from "After Office Hours" to "Figures Don't Lie." "Serenade" has been selected as the title of Adolphe Menjou's next comedy drama for Paramount for which Ernest Vajda wrote the story.

Industry Praised by Red Cross in Flood Relief

$417,212 in Cash Donated and Invaluable Aid Given in Visualizing Conditions

THE Red Cross Courier, official organ of the American Red Cross, in the issue of August 15th, gives the motion picture industry extensive credit for the raising of a substantial portion of the $17,000,000 which was turned over to the Red Cross in the Mississippi flood disaster.

In actual cash the motion picture industry raised $417,212.12, according to the latest reports made by film boards of trade to Will H. Hays. These boards of trade did a splendid work in assisting with the arrangements for the various benefits held by motion picture interests in different cities.

With regard to this the Red Cross Courier says:

"As helpful as the actual raising of funds was, it is doubtful if its value exceeds the worth of the service given by the motion picture itself in acquainting people with actual conditions in the flood areas."

The $417,212.21 raised by the industry was contributed directly to the local chapters of the Red Cross by the theatres that gave benefit performances. For these performances distributing companies contributed film with rental value totaling $44,593.46.

In addition, distributing companies in the devastated areas contributed to the Red Cross and Knights of Columbus film for 122 shows given for the refugees in emergency camps.

Los Angeles led in the matter of contributions with $54,273.84. In Milwaukee, school children sold 80,000 tickets at fifty cents each for a benefit performance at the Milwaukee Auditorium.

The campaigns throughout the United States were begun as a result of a suggestion from Will H. Hays to theatre owners and distributors. The exhibitor organizations backed the Red Cross to the utmost.

Money raised for the flood sufferers as reported by film boards of trade of various cities was as follows:

Pennsylvania Circuits Are Acquiring Many Individually Owned Houses

INDIVIDUALLY owned houses in Pennsylvania are rapidly being absorbed by the prominent circuits, according to a number of announcements made recently. Among the latest of these is that the Harris Amusement Companies of Pittsburgh has acquired the Holzman estate interests in the Majestic Theatre, Johnstown. At the same time the Johnstown papers announced the Majestic was one of eight Western Pennsylvania and Ohio theatres just added to the Harris string. The others are the Palace and Peoples of Tarentum; the Washington, Regent and Palace of Washington, Pa., and the Playhouse, Butler and Majestic of Findlay, Ohio.

From Reading comes the news that John N. Snyder, business partner of the late George Bennethum, has acquired the interest of the Bennethum estate in the theatres the two had jointly owned. The houses include the Strand and Opera House in Pittstown, the Lyric, Boyertown, and leases on the Hippodrome, Pottstown; Pictureland, Reading, and the Opera House, Coatesville.

The Comerford Amusement Company of Scranton has purchased the Hippodrome in Pottsville for 170,000, bringing its chain up to 143 houses in Pennsylvania and New York. The Comerford interests have also taken over the chain operated by the J. G. Meyer Amusement Company in Jersey Shore, Montoursville, Troy and Canton, and including also the City Theatre in Williamsport.

Many New England Houses To Undergo Changes

Most Important of Many Deals is That Involving Poli Circuit

WITH the approach of Fall, many changes and contemplated changes in New England motion picture theatres are becoming known, of which the most important is the pending deal involving the Poli Circuit, one of the strongest circuits in New England and operating theatres in the principal cities outside Boston.

Another important change is that involving the State Theatre at Hartford, which has been acquired by Mark Capitol-Stanley interests and will reopen this week Friday. The theatre is one of the largest and best known in Connecticut with seating capacity of 3,600. It is to become a straight picture theatre.

The Richmond Theatre at Richmond, Vt., has been bought by new interests said to be backed by local capital, J. E. Gannon making the sale, effective Sept. 1.

James Cohan of Boston, widely known in film circles, has bought Grange Hall at Merrimack, Mass., from Leslie Patterson, and will continue a policy of straight pictures.

In Worcester the new Arthur S. Friend theatre is to open about Nov. 1. The Worcester Theatre, which has been playing stock, the Plaza and the Elm, all three Poli houses, are apparently marking time during Poli negotiations before making any announcement regarding opening dates and policies.

The Orpheum Theatre at Danielson, Conn., formerly operated by the S & A Amusement Company of Putnam, Conn., has been taken over by the Regional Chain Theatres.

The new Humboldt Theatre in the Dorchester district, Boston, is planning for its opening on Labor Day.

George Hammond will operate the new Victory Theatre in Lowell, which is scheduled for formal opening early in October. This will be one of the largest theatres in that section of the state.

The new theatre being erected by Samuel Woolfson in Medford will probably be ready for formal opening the latter part of October. It will seat about 1,200.

Medford Theatre at Medford, Mass., has been extensively improved by its owner-manager, George H. Hackett and is scheduled for reopening at Labor Day.

Another new Massachusetts theatre to open about Labor Day is the Wollaston at Wollaston, owned by Abe Spitz.

New Houses for Brooklyn

35,000 Seats Will Be Added to Territory When Sixteen New Theatres Open

FULLY thirty-five thousand additional seats will be available to Brooklyn territory when approximately sixteen new theatres in the several sections of this city open within the next few weeks and months. Some are scheduled for an early Fall opening, others are almost completed and several are well advanced in the stage of construction.

On September 23, or thereabouts, Samuel Lesselbaum will open his new Fortway Theatre, Fort Hamilton avenue and 69th street, Brooklyn. Mr. Lesselbaum was the former owner and operator of the Premier Theatre before that house passed into Loew control.

Sam Ronnheimer's new house is nearing completion at Empire Boulevard and Kingston avenue, Brooklyn, and Loew's new Oriental Theatre in the fast growing section of Bensonhurst is also near its opening day—said to be two weeks away.

On the site of his old Marathon Theatre at Park Circle, Brooklyn, "Rudy" Sander's new house is well under way, and Herman Weingarten will add 600 seats to the downtown section of Brooklyn when the Montmartre opens as an extended run house.

Builder Schwartz, owner of the Elton Theatre, a house which was recently brought to the stage of completion in the Boro Park section of Brooklyn, will have a Labor Day opening, it is reported. Manager Greene will be his associate.

Somer's new 2,000-seat theatre at Ocean Parkway and Brighton Beach avenue is fast nearing the finished stage and the same can be said for Sam Berman's new 3,000, seat picture and vaudeville house at 64th street and 18th avenue. Both are in Brooklyn.

Three other new Brooklyn theatres soon to be ready are: "Mike" Goldreyer's Art Theatre, on Pineapple street in the Brooklyn Heights section; Rachmiel and Rinsler's Congress, St. Johns Place, near Buffalo avenue—scheduled to open next Thursday—and Sol Brill's Fresh Pond Road Theatre. The latter is a 2,000-seat house and it is rumored that the Keith circuit may acquire it in the near future.

Universal's handsome new atmospheric type theatre, designed by the well known Chicago architect, John Eberson, and located at 43d street and New Utrecht avenue, will be ready in about two weeks; Loew Theatres have started work on the large house to be built on 9th street, Park Slope section; Keith's big 4,000 seater under construction at Church avenue and Kenmore Place is well under way, and the Loew Circuit is putting finishing touches on its recently acquired Piccadilly Theatre, Kings Highway and East 18th street.

Saenger to Expand in Jamaica and Panama

In addition to this the Saengers will erect a new theater at Rose Gardens, Kingston. This will be a part of a $500,000 project to develop theatrical enterprises in Jamaica.

A third important enterprise already in progress is Saenger's large theater now under construction in Panama, and will cost approximately $500,000.

Alabama's Sunday Closing Bill Killed by Vote

OPPONENTS of the "Sunday Closing" bill now before the Alabama legislature, Montgomery, Alabama, scored a victory last Wednesday, when, led by H. C. Farley, the house committee on revision of laws killed the bill of Representative Monk to prohibit Sunday shows and other amusements. The bill was killed by a vote of 13 to 4 and was placed in the hands of a subcommittee known to be dead set against the Monk measure.

The bill's advocates received a surprise when their opponents produced Dr. Richard Wilkinsom, for several years rector of St. John's Episcopal church, who said that the legislature should not step in on local matters unless asked to do so. Oscar L. Tompkins, of Dothan, led the fight for a favorable report on the bill with its author. Rev. Bob Jones and D. F. Green, executive secretary of the Alabama Baptist Board, favored the passage of the measure.

Senator John Craft of Mobile county, made a vigorous appeal for the defeat of the bill, declaring that the people of Mobile and Montgomery had settled the question of Sunday amusements and that he did not see why the legislature should vote for it. This view was also expressed by Jesse B. Hearin, Sunday school teacher and head of the agricultural department of the chamber of commerce.

Innovations for Colony

Dr. Riesenfeld, Opposed to Vaudeville, Promises Many Novel Presentations

DR. HUGO RIESENFELD promises a number of innovations in the way of motion picture presentations when he reopens the Colony Theatre in New York on September 9th. A formal reserved seat opening will be held on that night, after which the policy will be regular continuous performances starting daily at noon.

Dr. Riesenfeld has expressed himself as decidedly opposed to the combination motion picture and vaudeville house and will confine the Colony to high-class presentations and pictures.

In discussing the opening Dr. Riesenfeld said:

"In vaudeville theatres films were often used to chase out the crowds to make way for new audiences for the vaudeville. It seems just a little absurd to me that the magnificent new picture palaces should rely upon vaudeville to recruit audiences for motion pictures. I feel sure that in this city of six million people there are enough interested in films to support a de luxe Broadway house dedicated to the finest screen entertainment, presented with discrimination and good showmanship.

"We are going to make an effort to make such people feel at home at the Colony. We hope it will be one of the smartest picture theatres on Broadway. While I will not have the largest orchestra, I will leave it to a jury of musicians whether or not it is the finest.

"There will be many innovations at the new Colony. I consider myself fortunate in having acquired some presentation novelties which I feel sure will be well received. A variety of novelties will lend spice to the programs and you may rest assured that they will never be crowded out to make room for any unwieldy and dull stage acts."

The Colony, which has been dark for some time, has been undergoing extensive alterations and will reopen with a 2,000-seat capacity. The initial picture upon reopening will be "The Cat and the Canary," Paul Leni's first production for Universal. Details of the surrounding program have not yet been completed by Dr. Riesenfeld.

Six Warner Releases for Month of September

"Old San Francisco" and "The First Auto," two extended run productions, head the Warner Bros. schedule of six releases for the month of September, their release dates being September 4 and September 18 respectively.

"Slightly Used," starring May MvAvoy, will be released on September 3 and "The Broadway Kid," starring George Jessel, on September 10. "Jaws of Steel," starring Rin-Tin-Tin, will be sent out on September 17. The last release for the month will be "A Sailor's Sweetheart," co-starring Louise Fazenda and Clyde Cook, which will come from the exchanges on September 24.

"The Blood Ship" Opening Three New Theatres

With two openings already scheduled, "The Blood Ship," Columbia's sea special, has also been chosen as the initial picture to be shown to the audiences of the Orpheum in Lansing, Michigan, when that house opens early next month. The Million Dollar Mayfair in Asbury, New Jersey, opened on August 6 with the Columbia production and Charles Miles' Oriental Theatre in Detroit will in the near future throw open its doors with "The Blood Ship" as its initial screen presentation.

Kane Will Produce Five for First National

ROBERT KANE has announced the titles of the five pictures which he will make under a new contract with First National for release in 1927-28.

"French Dressing," an original story by Adelaide Heilbron, will be the first film made under the new contract. Ben Lyon and Claudette Colbert will be co-featured. "Harold Teen," based on the comic strip by Carl Ed, next follows before the cameras at the Cosmopolitan Studio. Ben Lyon will again play the leading role. "The Golden Calf," taken from a Liberty Magazine story, will be the third Kane film next fall. "The Man and the Moment," an Elinor Glyn tale, the fourth Kane picture, may, in all likelihood, be switched to follow "French Dressing" into production. "A Child in Their Midst" completes the list of five films.

With "For the Love of Mike" now in the theatres, Kane has virtually finished his twelfth independently produced picture.

"THE JOY GIRL"

OLIVE BORDEN

THE young beauty and fresh charm of OLIVE BORDEN alone would be sufficient to make this FOX picture truly a joy picture, but it has many distinctions. Palm Beach is its background, and an air of social luxury pervades it. Tropical beauty frames every scene, with Technicolor skilfully preserving and presenting the high notes. An intriguing love story; an ingenious plot; a cast to marvel at, with Neil Hamilton, Helen Chandler, Mary Alden and two old (but never antique!) favorites—Marie Dressler and William Norris; and above all, through all—youth, rampant, cocksure youth! JOY is the Surname of this picture and GIRL is its family name—truly! A box office bon bon! One of the best and sweetest Olive Borden pictures!

New York City

BUSINESS took a decided spurt in practically all of the Broadway houses last week with the result that some of them hung up their best grosses this summer. Good show weather prevailed with a rainy Sunday thrown in for good measure. The showing of legitimate theatres is also a decided barometer and it is claimed for these houses that last Saturday night was by far the best they have had since warm weather settled in.

Going into its second week at the Roxy, "What Price Glory" topped its previous week end by $1,000 and the past week hung up a record that will probably stand for some time. $144,267 was the total amount, and this shows the drawing power of a real picture. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week has shown a slight fall as compared with last, but the figures indicate that a two weeks' run record will also be established.

"Wings" at the Criterion and "The Patent Leather Kid" at the Globe are both clicking along in fine shape, the former particularly catching the fancy of the public. An advance sale of two weeks is reported for both shows with standing room also sold out.

The week's gross at the Capitol shot up over the previous week when the Norma Shearer picture, "After Midnight" concluded its run while the Strand with Rod La Roque in "The Fighting Eagle" did better than the week before.

The Gaiety with "The King of Kings" stepping along at a pleasing pace, unruffled by other openings, and Fox Films "Seventh Heaven" at the Harris despite strong competition is still pulling them in.

"Service for Ladies," the Adolph Menjou picture at the Paramount, is said to be responsible for the best gross that house has had this summer. "Topsy and Eva," at the Rivoli is not getting along as well as it might and will go out the end of this week. Emil Jannings' remarkable performance in "The Way of All Flesh" is still attracting many to the Rialto.

It is too early to tell just what "Les Miserables" will do at the Central. Apparently this film will stay there for some time.

At the Astor "The Big Parade" is nearing its hundredth week and still getting pleasing results. It is reported that this picture will go out Sept. 10. A Russian film at the Cameo, a small theatre, seemed to share in the general prosperity and "Old San Francisco" is still at Warners'.

Chicago

SLIGHT sgins of improvement were noted in some of Chicago's neighborhood houses last week, the big, de luxe houses continuing to hold their own in a satisfactory manner.

The screen feature at the Chicago was "Becky" with Ben Bernie and his Broadway Jazz Orchestra heading the stage offerings, and business was normal. Paul Ash and his gang in "College Jazz," and Dorothy Gish in "Madame Pompadour" accounted for another good week at the Oriental, which has maintained its patronage throughout the summer. The timely offering of the Dempsey-Sharkey fight pictures in addition to the college romance, "For the Love of Mike," pulled strong at the Roosevelt Theatre. "The Big Parade," which went into its fourth week at McVickers Theatre, continues to interest the picture-going public, and a satisfactory box office report was turned in.

Northside theatres shared in the improved business of the week, the Granada having an exceptionally good week with "The Resurrection" as its feature picture, Benny Meroff and his stage band and Vitaphone. The Uptown with "The Poor Nut" on the screen and Benny Kreuger on the stage, with other attractions, had an average week. "Metropolis" was the screen offering at the Sheridan with Verne Buck and his band as the leading stage attraction, and only fair business was enjoyed.

On the west side "Resurrection" also proved itself a strong drawing card, where Charles Kaley was in "A Trip on the Comet" and George Givot also appeared as a stage attraction.

"The Callahans and the Murphys" with Vitaphone and Del Delbridge and his Merrymakers, brought a normal attendance to the Capitol, and the Tivoli had a fair week with "The Unknown" as its screen feature and Lottie Mayer's Diving Girls on the stage.

Atlanta

WITH an interesting array of well chosen pictures, each one possessing some definite merit, Atlanta theatres fought out a strongly competitive battle last week with better than average box-office results.

"The Blood Ship," at Keith's Georgia, was the box-office lead, with big attendance all week, generous word-of-mouth advertising and ample recognition from the press.

"Stark Love," showing at the Rialto, received two highly laudatory signed reviews that reacted through the box-office.

The Capitol Theatre presented "Dearie" to uniformly large and enthusiastic audiences. The picture "clicked" mightily throughout the week.

At the Publix de luxe Howard Theatre "Ten Modern Commandments" was well received and favorably reviewed by critics. It's record shows box-office value.

The public had a pleasant surprise in "Broadway Nights," which held the boards at the Metroploitan all week.

"The Understanding Heart" went over satisfactorily with patrons of Loew's Grand, the spectacular stuff and comedy element finding ample favor. The Tudor registered its customary success at the box-office with "Rambling Ranger," "Perils of the Coast Guard," and "Hero on Horseback," dividing honors pretty evenly, each running for two days.

"Mile-a-Minute Man," the one first-run picture of the week at the New Alamo, was an average drawing card Friday and Saturday, the first four days of the week being filled by return engagements of two different attractions.

Boston

MORE rapidly than in former seasons, Boston theatres are reaching mid-season conditions. This week has been better than last week and last week was better than the preceding week.

Probably the real answer is that Boston theatres are giving better pictures than ever before and better stage entertainment. Every theatre which could reasonably be called old has been remodelled, redecorated, reseated and modernized. Only a short while back, downtown Boston theatres alone advertised in the Boston papers and on Boston billboards. Today finds the suburban theatre a real competitor.

This week finds Jackie Coogan featured in "The Bugle Call" at Loew's State Theatre, with Jan Garber and orchestra, known as the Victor Mirth Makers and Beth Challis, singing comedienne, as the presentation number.

Few films of recent appearance have been given more space by the reviewers than "The Way of All Flesh" at the Metropolitan this week. Gene Rodemich and his Metropolitan Merry Makers continue to provide the presentation number with the aid of new assisting talent each week.

"Painting the Town" is the feature at Loew's Orpheum and a vaudeville bill headed by Barbette. At the twin houses, Modern and Beacon, the double features are "The Missing Link" and "Good as Gold."

"Slaves of Beauty" has proven a big drawing card at the Keith-Albee Boston Theatre, while the double bill at the Fenway, "Lost at the Front" and "Manpower" has grossed well. Other theatres joining in the report of well filled houses include the University with "The Climbers" and "Tarzan and the Golden Lion;" the Exeter with "Arizona Bound" and "The Climbers;" the Capitol with "The Unknown" and "Fast and Furious," the Olympia with "Lost at the Front" and "Hard Boiled Haggerty" and the Scollay Square with the same double bill.

Los Angeles

WEATHER conditions in Los Angeles do not affect box office receipts to any great extent, with the possible exception to matinees, as it is always cool after sunset. The neighborhood theatres always have splendid attendance, especially the theatre where the alluring sign, "Feature preview tonight" is on display in the lobby.

"Seventh Heaven" at Carthay Circle Theatre is doing capacity business, both matinee and evening, with the advance sales heavier than on any other production shown at the house.

"Firemen, Save My Child" did so well at Million Dollar that it was held a second week.

The Clara Bow fans, and she has many, were out in full force to witness, "Hula," at the Metropolitan. Rube Wolf and the Fanchon-Marco "Parisian Idea" added to the very entertaining bill.

Lon Chaney in "Mockery" at Loew's State drew well while, "For the Love of Mike" at the Uptown maintained average box office receipts.

Cleveland

THIS was a good week at all the theatres. The weather continues cold. The Industrial Exposition staged at the Public Auditorium brought hundreds of people from surrounding towns into the city. And legitimate theatre competition has not yet started.

"Ben Hur," playing its first popular priced engagement in the country at the Stillman, easily walked off with first honors. Although the picture opened big, it has been growing steadily each day. It is being held for a continued run. "After Midnight" did fairly well at the Allen, where it was surrounded by an elaborate presentation. "For the Love of Mike" pulled just average business at the State, although it received newspaper notices as being a "good wholesome picture for the entire family." "Old San Francisco" brought out all lovers of melodrama, of whom there are many, as evidenced by its being held a second week. "Painting the Town" did very well at Keith's Palace, where it had been well exploited. "For the Love of Mike," pleasant, light entertainment, did fairly well at the State. "The Notorious Lady," a second rate story with a first rate cast, also rang up a fair average for the week at the Park. "Beware of Widows" was mildly successful at both Keith's East 105th St. and at Reade's Hippodrome. "The Heart of Salome" at the Hippodrome the last half of the week did fairly well. "The Naked Truth," propaganda film on the social evil, continues to do business at the East Ninth's St. Theatre, where it just finished its sixth week. The Circle is still on its summer policy of daily change revivals. Neighborhood theatres report a picking up in business.

Kansas City

BOX offices "clicked" much more regularly this week than in several weeks in Kansas City at first run houses. Cooler weather may or may not have been responsible for the increase in attendance at virtually all theatres.

At the Newman Esther Ralston in "Ten Modern Commandments" drew big all week. At the Royal, Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton in "Firemen, Save My Child," played for the second week to good business.

Milton Sills in "Hard Boiled Haggerty" at the Main Street held up well both afternoon and night business. The Dempsey-Sharkey fight packed them in at the Globe, while "Birds of Prey" at the Pantages did better business than last week.

Raymond Griffith in "Time to Love" at the Liberty also played to full houses.

Seattle

THE last week was an average one for the theatres of this city—the warm weather kept many of the city residents away from the houses of entertainment, but hundreds of visitors enjoyed the programs that were offered. Business in general was below normal, however.

The Fifth Avenue Theatre, although it did a very good business for the entire week, fell very noticeably below the average of the last five weeks. "Time to Love" with Raymond Griffith was the feature. Eddie Peabody and one or two good Fanchon-Marco specialty entertainers saved the program. Business was probably several thousands of dollars below the $20,000 mark, which has been clicking regularly lately.

The best business in town was checked up by Manager Robert W. Bender's Columbia Theatre, considering capacity. The Columbia offered Menjou's "Service for Ladies," and did a very big business for the week. An added attraction of importance was the appearance at each performance of Miss Seattle.

An unusual first run situation occurred at the United Artists and Coliseum Theatres, in the fact that both houses played second run pictures which had appeared at the same houses many months before. "The Covered Wagon" played the first week of a two-week engagement at the United Artists Theatre, and did a nice business, but was far from a sensation. At the Coliseum, "Quicksands" was just an average drawing card, built up to a considerable extent by a strong supporting program.

The Blue Mouse Theatre played the first week of a two-week engagement of "The Heart of Maryland," which did a very good business. The Vitaphone subjects, including Blossom Seeley, Senator Ford, Flonzaley Quartet and Schumann-Heink were not very well received, particularly the first two mentioned.

At the Pantages Theatre, "Colleen" was just a fair attraction, built up by a pleasing vaudeville program. The Embassy played "God Gave Me Twenty Cents," but the title was against the film, and business was not particularly good. At the Strand Theatre, John Danz cashed in on the presence of the Pacific Fleet and many country visitors in Seattle by playing a return engagement of "Is Your Daughter Safe?" as a "Men Only" attraction.

Neighborhood show business was very much off, according to reports from the larger houses.

Oklahoma City

"SMILE, BROTHER, SMILE," at the Empress last week made a good showing at the box-office, and also went over well with the audiences as there were many chuckles during its showing.

"Chang" did a nice business at the Criterion too. This was shown the week before at three consecutive morning matinees for the children under 12 of the city. These free shows were very well attended and seemed to prove good advertising to the public.

"The Heart of Maryland" proved a success at the Capitol the first of the week, and gave way to another winner the last of the week, "Metropolis." This latter picture seemed to be a case of where the audience attendance was excellent, yet the picture itself failed to please a good percent. Everyone was talking about the photography and "oddness" of "Metropolis," while he criticized the picture. Yet curiosity won at the book-office.

"My Lady of Whims," a Clara Bow story presented by an Independent Company—and evidently made about eighteen months ago—made a good business for the Liberty the first part of the week. "Closed Gates" closed the week at this theatre to fair business.

The weather the first two days of the week was extremely warm but the cool days that followed made business pick up all along "Main Street." Indications are that the fall theatre season is about to begin.

Salt Lake City

THE thermometer has dropped considerably of late, especially in the evenings, in and about Salt Lake, and down town theatre business has been tremendous as a general rule.

The Paramount Empress management reports last week to have seen the biggest results experienced within the past twelve months during the showing of "The Rough Riders." In addition to the feature picture and the short subjects, a stage presentation was also offered.

"The Big Parade," which is now finishing the second week at the Pantages, has smashed every record ever made at this house, having played to over fifty thousand people the first week and a similarly mammoth crowd the second week.

Large crowds attended the Victory Theatre during the week's run of Dorothy Gish and Antonio Moreno in "Madame Pompadour." An added stage attraction was also included in the bill.

"That Model from Paris," went over very satisfactorily at the Gem with capacity houses being the rule.

The Rialto Theatre was unable to take care of patrons who were desirous of seeing "Rookies," it is announced.

Exploitation ran heavy on the above productions, and results were extremely beneficial.

Detroit

BIG business has resulted here from the advertising campaign conducted in connection with Greater Movie Season. Extensive use of newspaper columns and extra publicity are the chief causes of large grosses in the houses, although first-rate weather conditions last week assisted materially.

"Old Ironsides," the pictorial tribute to America's famous warship, leads by a wide margin. This production selling at special road show prices brought immense crowds to the New Detroit. Critics unanimous in their praise and heavy crowds were on hand for every showing. To be held over.

At the Madison, a good record was established with "The Cat and the Canary," many customers being thrilled at Laura La Plante's adventures in a forbidding, deserted mansion. Matinees went strong and nights even stronger, so the management has decided to retain it another week.

Money was also spent without much reluctance on the Adams photo-romance, "When a Man Loves," starring John Barrymore and Dolores Costello. Races to the ticket windows took place every evening and the afternoon crowds were not slow either.

The Michigan chalked up nice performance totals through Milton Sills' "Hard-Boiled Haggerty," backed by Boyd Senter in a syncopation flight labeled "Non-Stop to Mars."

After the first day's business of "Smile, Brother, Smile" the Capitol management has sufficient reason for adopting a similar course. Sunday business excellent but a drop occurred Monday. However, from Tuesday on the house was invariably filled. A stage attraction was featured on the bill.

Monte Blue in "The Black Diamond Express" pulled good throngs throughout the week at the Colonial, while "The Irresistible Lover," featuring Norman Kerry and Lois Moran, went along at a good clip on the State screen.

Minneapolis

NO theatre records were smashed in Minneapolis last week, but nearly every picture house reported business brisk. The weather has been bright and cool—ideal for theatre-going—and the box offices have been busy as a result, even if there were no outstanding attractions.

The State did a very good business with Richard Dix and Mary Brian in "Manpower." A stage novelty, "The Garden of Enchantment," an Our Gang comedy, and the Kouns Sisters on the Vitaphone rounded out a very satisfactory program. The Strand also did a good business with Patsy Ruth Miller in "Painting the Town" and the Lyric was packed most of the time during the second week's showing of the Dempsey-Sharkey fight pictures. Johnny Hines in "White Pants Willie" was an added attraction on this program.

Pantages featured Blanche Sweet and Warner Baxter in "Singed" and had a good week's business. The Hennepin-Orpheum supplemented its vaudeville program with Joseph Schildkraut in "His Dog," and the Seventh Street, the junior Orpheum house, enjoyed good patronage with Francis McDonald in "The Valley of Hell."

The leading neighborhood houses all reported average or better than average attendance. Pictures featured at these houses—the Loring, Lagoon, Rialto and Lyndale—included "The Better 'Ole," Colleen Moore in "Naughty, But Nice," John Barrymore in "The Beloved Rogue" and Leon Errol in "Lunatic at Large."

Milwaukee

COLD weather, the exhibitors' ally, descended upon Milwaukee this week and shot receipts at all theatres up a notch or two. Business was brisk both down town and at the neighborhood houses. The week began rather slow, but ended with a redeeming flourish.

Jack Mulhall in "The Poor Nut" headed the bill at the Wisconsin and did good business, supported by a strong stage presentation. The Strand had "Laff Week" which was unusually well attended. The pictures were "Time to Love" and "Haunted Spooks," both making a strong bid for popularity. "The Blonde Saint" drew very good houses to the Alhambra Theatre. The feature at the Garden was "Colleen" and brought in gratifying returns. "Convoy" was also well attended at the Merrill.

A varied selection was offered patrons of the neighborhood theatres this week, and all theatres reported business considerably above average for this season of the year. The Milwaukee drew good houses with "Rough House Rosie." "The World at Her Feet" seemed popular with the large audiences of the Oriental. "On Ze Boulevard" was the feature at the Tower. Patrons of the Venetian turned out in goodly numbers to see "The Claw."

Baltimore

TWO pictures did excellent business during the week beginning Monday, August 15, in Baltimore, and another broke the house record and generally speaking business for the seven day period was good.

"The Circus Ace," starring Tom Mix with five circus acts on the program and the lobby and exterior decorated and arranged like a main entrance to a big circus, broke all house records at Whitehurst's Garden. Special back page advertising was used in conjunction with this show urging children to ask their parents to bring them to the theatre.

"Annie Laurie," proved a wonderful patron puller at Loew's Valencia and "Firemen, Save My Child," sharing honors on the program with the Parisian Redheads, Bobby Gryce and Newhoff and Phelps, pulled them in strong at Loew's Century.

The best business done during the entire summer at Keith's Hippodrome was evidenced by the showing of "Somewhere in Sonora," featuring Ken Maynard in that house with five acts of vaudeville.

"On Ze Boulevard" proved a good drawing card at Whitehurst's New Theatre, but business there might have been helped by the publicity given the New, when John T. Moore, the manager was assaulted and robbed Monday night.

"The Swell-Head," featuring Ralph Graves and Eugenia Gilbert and Johnny Walker, did pretty fair business throughout the week at Warners' Metropolitan, with Vitaphone presentations on the same program.

While the critics here gave Raymond Griffith's latest picture "Time to Love," good write-ups, it did not pull so well at the Rivoli Theatre and business there could be considered less than fair.

Ottawa

THE theatres of Ottawa, Ontario, bucked against the Connaught Park Jockey Club meet and the baseball and lacrosse league finals during the week of August 15 and everybody got a good share of business despite the opposition.

B. F. Keith's Theatre had another big Monday and this house was nicely filled at every night performance during the remainder of the week. The film attraction was "The Fourth Commandment" and it was voted one of the best seen there in a long time. The vaudeville was good but this picture overshadowed even the fine stage acts.

The British program at the Regent was also an excellent draw and Manager Tubman did not hang any flags out to make it patriotic, either. The feature was "Madame Pompadour," starring Dorothy Gish, and added was the Boys' Navy League Band of Victoria, B. C., which was on its way home after a trip to Great Britain.

"One Hour of Love" looked good on the signboards of the Centre Theatre and with plenty of stars in the cast it made fine entertainment for flappers, wives, old maids and sheiks, who really turned out in force. This went on for three days when "Wedding Bills," starring Raymond Griffith, relieved the tension for the rest of the week. The Centre had a pick-up week with these two.

Reginald Denny's automobile story "Fast and Furious" at the Imperial Theatre was another capable production and drew fairly well, although attendance suffered through the absence of the six-piece string orchestra which had helped to boost things through July.

"Tillie the Toiler," as second run at the Eden Theatre in Hull, Quebec, again pleased a lot of fans and Manager Donat Paquin counted quite a heap of cash. The Capitol Theatre, Hull, Quebec, followed the Centre in Ottawa with "One Hour of Love" and had quite a bit better than average business.

Albany

LAST week in Albany was characterized with what might be termed good movie weather, the days being moderate and the evenings coming off cool and delightful. Such conditions brought an immediate response in the box offices of the various downtown theatres in Albany and Troy. For instance, "Underworld" played at the Mark Strand to business that would ordinarily be handled in October or November.

The same held true with "Running Wild" at the Mark Ritz, which did a most satisfactory business throughout the entire week. At the Leland, "Framed" started off Monday to almost capacity business and held up throughout the week. This picture, like the others, appeared to please the local critics. There is one thing that must be said of tthe newspaper critics in Albany, and that is if they do not like a picture, they say so in no uncertain terms. One of these critics is an old timer and his reports are closely followed by thousands.

In Troy, the Troy theatre played "Twelve Miles Out" to fairly good business throughout the week. John Gilbert is a favorite in the collar city. The theatre owners of Troy and Albany are keeping their houses cool and delightful this summer, which is also an important factor. While daylight saving, of course, has its drawbacks to the motion picture theatre, it does not seem to hurt this year to the extent of past seasons. This may be due to the fact that theatre owners in Albany and Troy have come to the wise decision of putting on good pictures during the summer months, rather than to seek about and show anything that has been booked and which is of doubtful drawing power.

Central Pennsylvania

SMASHING the record for attendance at any motion picture show in Harrisburg for a like period, 30,000 persons viewed "What Price Glory" in the week of August 15, at the Colonial Theatre.

It was the first appearance of the famous war play in that city, but nevertheless the regular prices of tickets prevailed,—30 and 50 cents and 15 cents for children. Four shows a day were given. So popular was the picture the first week that Manager Charles Jones, of the Colonial, arranged to keep the film for the following week, although another picture had been advertised.

"Running Wild," with Mary Brian and W. C. Fields, opened the week at the Victoria, but proved to have no very great pulling power. At mid-week the bill was changed and "The Covered Wagon," on a return visit to Harrisburg, was put on to finish the week and did splendidly.

At Loew's Regent the feature all week was Lillian Gish in "Annie Laurie," which proved profitable attraction, although it is probable the business fell below what would have been done had not "What Price Glory" been going so strong in a rival theatre.

At the State, the first three days, the film attraction was the comedy, "Is Zat So?" with George O'Brien and Edmund Love, and the last half of the week "Rich Men's Sons," featuring Ralph Graves and Shirley Mason, was presented. Both helped attract big crowds in connection with the vaudeville offerings.

"The Hawk of the Hills"
(Patheserial—10 Episodes)
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

BEGINS another twenty-reel recountal of intrigue, treachery, double-crossing, Indians, kidnapping, theft, fistfights, troopers, firearms, villainy, rescues and all the other serial situations, this time laid in the bright sunshine and verdure-clad mountains of the early West. Allene Ray and Walter Miller are again co-starring under the direction of Spencer Bennet; the story is by George Arthur Gray, and if the first three chapters are an indication of what is to come we would say that the rabid serial fans are going to have a fine time following the different developments. As it shapes up now, the serial has sufficient punch and competency in its portrayal and presentation to pass muster as a logical follower of the many serial successes put out by Pathe in the past.

Frank Lackteen is the villain of the piece, being a half breed Indian with a wolfish, hungry look on his bronze countenance. Chief White Horse and members of the Araphoe Indian tribe appear in the cast, which also claims adequate character actors in Paul Panzer, Wally Oettel and Harry Semels. The photography is first rate and the director keeps his plot well in hand, giving the proper stress to the menace's insidious hoverings around the helpless heroine.

The Hawk is a leader of a depraved band, who respond to his every wish. In the first chapter they rob the claim of two prospectors, killing one and keeping the other captive. This prisoner is father of Miss Ray, who is traveling to meet her uncle, the Indian agent. The Hawk also captures the Indian agent, thinking to substitute him with one of his own men, and takes on a new member for his gang in the person of Walter Miller. Just who the latter is, whether he is a villain who will be moulded to a virtuous state by the beauty of the heroine or whether he is a government man in disguise, is a question the fans will be eager to ascertain as they follow up the successive episodes. It is seen early, though, that he is a friend to the girl, for he warns the driver of her stage when the Indians attempt to waylay her. There are plenty of details crowded into these reels, plenty of excitement, too. The continual ups and downs of the fortunes of the heroine, the resourcefulness of Walter Miller to meet all the situations as they arise and the foiling of the villainous Lackteen will, we are sure, keep the interest aroused until the final fadeout somewhere in the future has arrived.

"His Better Half"
(Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

IMAGINE the "Ham" Hamilton as a plump, buxom dame! He's on view in this comedy as an unwieldy, awkward female attired in blonde wig, long flouncy dress and lace wristlets. And, although he is not as competent a lady impersonator as Syd Chaplin or Julian Eltinge, his outlandish appearance and fluttering feminine ways are still comical and droll. Tender-hearted "Ham" thought he would help a friend out by substituting as a newly acquired bride. You see, his friend during a carouse had wired his relations that he was homeward bound with a blushing helpmate on his arm. When he reached a sober state, he realized that he would have to get a real wife or "Ham" would have to do some subbing. Quite a departure for the veteran comedian is this role.

Surrounded by admiring and doting relatives, Hamilton finds the reception anything but congenial; the only one in whom he is interested is pretty Estelle Bradley, the daughter of the house. The various attempts of the playful relatives to entertain their guest will surely make 'em chuckle. The rotund comic has only to do a few of the many tricks he knows so well to get the average audience a-laughing. Good support is had in the comedy of Al Thompson and Henry Murdock. The latter gives the impression that he has lots of ability under cover. Glen Cavender and Blanche Payson are the other two troupers in the cast. Norman Taurog presided at the megaphone.

"A Half-Pint Hero"
(Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THEY have put together a lot of gag stuff for Lupino Lane in this two-reeler and much of it is funny, but it would seem a comedian of the versatility of Lane is worthy of much better material. He hardly gets a chance to strut his stuff to the best advantage but what he does he does humorously and well.

The comedian is a fireman and in the firehouse is a rival for the girl he loves. They become involved in all sorts of episodes, even to the smearing of custard pies. An alarm calls them to a disastrous fire and while they are there the home of the girl also starts afire. She sends the alarm by note with her dog, which delivers it to Lane. He dashes back and is followed by the rival.

Lane scales to the girl's room via way of awnings, while the rival dashes up the burning stairway. There is a wild scramble between them to save the girl and Lane finally succeeds by jumping to the telegraph wires with the girl and sliding down the pole. The picture will undoubtedly be liked in the neigbhorhood houses.

"Danger Ahead"
(Universal Featurette—Two Reels)

THIS new series from Universal might well be termed "Northwestern" instead of Western for the reason that the stories deal with the activities of the Northwest Mounted Police. Undoubtedly this change from the regular ranch house fare will find favor among bookers of this type of picture, for the past year's crop of both full length and two reel Westerns has been a considerable one.

Jack Perrin, under the direction of Bruce Mitchell, is the featured player and does very well in the role of a mounted 'cop'. In this one he takes the assignment of rounding up a gang of horse raiders. He not only successfully accomplishes this, but after some harrowing experiences gains a bride as well. Action is well done.—E. G. JOHNSTON.

"The Scrappin' Fool"
(Universal Featurette—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

A RIP roarin' "Literary feller" is the hero of this two reel Western and he does everything that heroes of these pictures do except tote a couple of guns. He is a "no-gun-man" instead of being one of the chaps who usually carry two or more cannons out in the wide open country.

This strenuous author is out among the cattle ranchers in search of stories, but finally concludes that he must put on cowboy clothing in order to get some real color. Immediately he becomes embroiled in a quarrel between two neighboring ranchers. In a fist fight with a gunman who has arrived there to become the paid assasin of one rancher, he vanquishes that gentleman and uses the latter's name. Eventually he is the means of patching up the fued—in fact hero-Bob Curwood does everything—even to the point of stealing one rancher's daughter for his bride. This Featurette will satisfy for those who play them.

"Olympic Games"
(Pathe-Our Gang—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THE title of this one gives promise of some keen comedy, which does not develop. The games feature of the picture falls down badly and the director has resorted to the hurling of overripe eggs and fruit for his humor. The atmosphere and the countenances of the gang are fairly smeared with too ripe eggs and fruit of all descriptions. For one with a weak stomach some of the closeups would be extremely nauseating.

While the "rasberry" has nothing to do with the throwing of the fruit it cuts considerable figure in the development of the story—if any. As the games progress there is a continuous repetition of the "rasberry" from some unknown quarter and the gang takes exception to it. They charge on the wrong victim on numerous occasions and submit him to a beating. Eventually all of the victims band together and return with their supply of too ripe fruit and eggs and the battle is on. It must have taken considerable time to collect all the garbage that is hurled with unerring aim to the countenances of all concerned.

"Up In Arms"
(Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

DOROTHY DEVORE is featured in this comedy which has a cast consisting also of Al Thompson, Stanley Blystone, Glen Cavender and Charles Dourety. It is a fast moving comedy, some of it good and some not so good, but taken as a whole is very passable. It is replete with automobile and aeroplane stuff and in addition to the comedy offers a number of thrills.

There is a lot of old gag stuff in the automobile sequences, such as losing the steering wheel and dodging in and out among street cars and trucks. There are parachute jumps from aeroplanes and there are perilous changes from one plane to another with Miss Devore the center of activity. In fact she is kept continuously on the jump. It is fairly full of action with enough good comedy to put it over.

"The Dancing Fools"
(Universal-Stern Bros.—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

"MIKE AND IKE," otherwise known as Charles King and Charles Dorety, are with us again accompanied by their usual troubles. This time they have a date with a couple of girls but have a difficult time evading their landlord who seeks to collect the long due rent. They finally get away and meet the girls—one fat and one lean—and end up in a tough cabaret where the orchestra leader shoots a gun when the next number is to start, and where a prize is offered for the roughest dance. Mike and his fat flapper carry off the honors. This one has a pretty fair assortment of laughs.

"The Small Town Sheriff"
(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

AL FALFA is the sheriff in this one of the Fables cartoons and he descends upon a soda fountain speakeasy. Instead of confiscating the goods he partakes of them and forthwith must become a victim of the D.T.'s for he is next seen up in the clouds and is eventually in a boat which runs amuck of a comet. He is carried along at a terrific rate until he comes to in the midst of a band of wild animals. There is little in the way of humor in it.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Love's Languid Lure"
(Pathe-Sennett—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

FROM the entertainment angle this Mack Sennett starring Ben Turpin is only moderate. To be sure, the cross-eyed comedian has several good gags and receives good support from the other members of the cast, but on the whole their efforts will only provoke mirth of the subdued kind.

Ben is a country lad, the idol of his mother and the love of Pretty Montgomery, who works in the same store with him. The piquant Peggy felt that romantic feeling for her Ben until the oily villain from the city breezed into town one day; then, little by little, her romantic ardor cooled towards the cross-eyed one, and she finally leaves him flat to go off with the city slicker. Poor Ben has no one to turn to in his loneliness except his mother.

The high spots of the comedy are those where the city feller cheats at cards, winning Ben's savings, and those in which Turpin sadly sings "Sweet Adeline" with all the necessary facial expressions. Its other parts are but average. That scene where the store keeper tries to make a sale with a customer should be left out; it is out of place and is a vulgar way to get laughs. Other players in the comedy, which was directed by Earl Rodney, are Sunshine Hart, Irving Bacon, William McCall and Jack Cooper.

Pathe Review, Number 35
(Pathe—One Reel)

THERE are three subjects in this issue of the Pathe Review: "Concerning Babies," "The Town of Tomorrow" and "The Seal Hunt." The first is a human bit, done in color, and showing a tussle between a baby and a monkey over a bottle of milk. After this good start a novelty is introduced in closeup shots of a model town in Colorado where everything, from the backyard fence to the railroad train, is done in miniature. Away up in the Northern Canadian Coast, the camera next brings the spectator to witness an actual seal hunt in the icy expanses. You see the boat leaving its haven, forcing its way steadily and surely through the masses of floating ice. Occasionally, dynamite must be used to release the ship when the ice holds it tightly within its grasp. Actual shots are taken of the seals who do not scurry to safety with the near approach of man and who are picked off at a distance with rifle shots. You see them dragging the carcasses of the slain mammals aboard the ship. The haunts of the seal are invaded every year by hardy men; adventures and method of approach are interesting, to say the least. The usual educational standard is maintained in this issue of the Review.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Holly-Nuts
(Educational—One Reel)

ALL of the freaks of Hollywood are on display in this one, which is described as the movie side show. It shows the fat woman, the fat boy, the witch, the man who bathes his beard in milk daily to draw his pay, the lean tall woman, the midget and many others who draw little more than a pittance to appear before the camera.

The picture also is interesting because it shows the roads leading to Hollywood, the Hollywood boulevards, studios and some of the homes of the stars. As a novelty it will probably go well.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"On the Hook"
(Pathe-Sportlight—One Reel)

SOMETHING of interest for all devotees of Izaak Walton. The thrill of expectancy an angler has when he battles a fish, the uncertainty of the tug of war, are in this pictorial version of the catching and landing of a huge tarpon off the coast of Florida. One of the biggest and gamest of fish, the tarpon puts up a terrific resistance as he is towed in by the relentless hook and line. There he is twisting and turning, threshing and churning the water, leaping high into the air, diving deeply—anything to escape that line slowly but surely drawing him to his doom. The cameraman has played up the thrills in the battle, alternating between the frantic efforts of the tarpon to escape and the dogged tenacity of the fisherman to land his prey. This deep sea fishing must be great sport, one concludes, as scenes of this Sportlight are unreeled. Audiences should get a kick out of the battle of life and death.

In contrast to the gorgeous fight put up by the tarpon is the indoor fishing scenes used as an opener. Here the fish are in a swimming pool into which dangle the lines of easy going fishermen, who stretch out on a comfortable chair awaiting a nibble. Weak anaemic fishing, this—for in comparison with the sporting chance given the aquatic denizens of the Atlantic the catching of a few fish in a pool is not much of an accomplishment. This is a good Grantland Rice Sportlight—and you know how good the brand can be.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Mum's the Word"
(Fox—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

IF action and running through situations are the main ingredients for a two-reeler Fox has a good one in this. Every effort is made to pile up situations as rapidly as possible and to keep the characters on the jump evading each other or dodging the slapstick. The brand of comedy is something else again. As in nearly all of these alleged comedies the humor is entirely too much exaggerated unless the picture is made for audiences under ten years of age.

The story is of the very fresh and breezy young masher who tries to "make" the pretty daughter of the stern judge, who is opposed to mashing. The youth trails her into a department store and in order to talk to her steps behind the counter and waits upon her. He is apprehended by the store detective and brought before the stern judge, who sentences him to walk the streets placarded as a masher.

Later the judge unwittingly enters the wrong apartment and is about to be compromised, when the youth, also involved, conceives a way out for them both, saves a delicate situation, and with an implied threat keeps the stern judge mum as he wins the winning daughter. —CHESTER J. SMITH.

"The Cry of Winter"
(Educational—One Reel)

A NUMBER of interesting sights and, pleasing scenic shots are shown in this one of the Outdoor Sketches series. Few stop to think of the hardships the wild animals undergo through the bleak Winter. Here are shown the antelope and the mountain goat in their quest for food. Hundreds of the species are on display wandering aimlessly for fodder enough to carry them over until Spring.

As a second part of the reel shows The Hot Place with the many phenomena of the Yellowstone Park on display. There are some good shots of Old Faithful and the other wonders of the National park. It is all fairly interesting and instructive.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Oh, Teacher"
(Universal-Oswald Cartoon—One Reel)

EVEN though many complimentary things have already been said about these new animated Rabbit cartoons of Universal's, this is the first one of the series that this writer has seen and he wishes to add his endorsement. They are amusing and should find favor among the general run of exhibitors who want to give their patrons a change of diet. The ears and feet of this animal should make interesting things for a cartoonist to work on. Oswald's rival is a vicious Tom Cat which seeks to win the rabbit's sweetheart—but the latter wins out. —E. G. JOHNSTON.

"At Ease"
(Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS is a typical Hamilton vehicle and will undoubtedly be appreciated by the comedian's fans. It is just a lot of hokkum and slapstick with a climax of aeroplane stuff to bring it right down to the minute. Hamilton is the rookie in the citizen's training camp—and a very much exaggerated rookie at that. He is put through all the paces of the camp and bobbles them all badly, upsetting lieutenants, captains and generals in his awkwardness.

Put in the awkward squad, the comedian even disrupts that and when the hardboiled sergeant asks if any one is tired of walking Hamilton steps forward. He is then made to run, with the sergeant prodding him at every step. Eventually the pair find themselves in an aeroplane and to save a crash they are compelled to jump. Hamilton is warned to count ten and then pull the string, but unknown to him, Lloyd's parachute rope becomes severed before he makes the jump. He jumps, counts ten and pull the string, but lands a-top of his companion's parachute and the pair descend safely. There is enough fair comedy in it to make it appealing to those who like that sort of thing.

"Too Much Sleep"
(Universal-Andy Gump—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

HERE is a corking good Andy Gump comedy—made good not only through the efforts of Joe Murphy, but considerably more so by Fay Tincher who does her stuff in a way to make some of the younger element in comedies look like mere tyros. Most of the action centers around dumbbell Andy, who manages to reverse connections on the gas and water pipes while making repairs. Naturally, water flows through the gas pipes—and water through the gas jets. Director Francis Corby has made the most out of this situation. There are other parts equally as good.

"Cutting a Melon"
(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

THERE is nothing in this Aesop Fables cartoon for which it could possibly be recommended. It is entirely devoid of humor, though the cartoonists tried to cram some in out of very thin material. Al Falfa is the owner of a watermelon patch, which attracts all the dogs of the neighborhood. When Al starts out with his wagon all of the canines chase after it and steal the melons. Al gives chase and as he does so one of the dogs steals the wagon. It's a very poor subject.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Felix the Cat in the Travel-Hog"
(Educational—One Reel)

NOT much of a story behind this Felix cartoon. It is not even a tryout for the versatile cat, but to its credit it is fast-moving and always on the go. The lively pace started when Felix slips onto a piece of soap is maintained to the finish. But, even though it is a fast and snappy number, the competent cat is thrown hither and yon like a rubber ball, and few opportunities are had for him to demonstrate his agreeable mimicking. Give Felix better material to work with.

Our initial sequence is one of Felix at his bath. He had just promised his wife that he would slip on something and be down to breakfast with her in a jiffy. He does slip—on a cake of soap—and falls out of a window only to be kicked by an arrogant mule right into the path of a tornado. Felix is traveling as fast as light itself—one minute he is up in the North Pole, the next we see him in Holland, Italy, Egypt. He goes up to the moon itself—what worlds these cartoon heroes can conquer! Finally a volcano gets Felix in its clutches and projects him over the broad Atlantic on a nonstop flight to his home.—RAYMOND GANLY.

Mockery

Not So Hot, But Chaney Puts It Over

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY'RE still serving up different characterizations to Lon Chaney—and the end is nowhere in sight. In his newest entry he gets away from the super-morbid roles which presented him crippled or deformed. Instead he acts a stolid, stupid Russian peasant and extracts a deal of sympathy for the figure. It's a simple story which is offered here—one which is perfectly obvious all the way. Indeed, had the director drawn a map he could not have made it more easy to follow. One knows what will happen the moment the characters are planted.

The story is a sort of aftermath of the revolution. The peasant rescues the aristocratic heroine from a band of Mouziks and suffers a severe beating as a result. Naturally with his slow-thinking mind he is unable to comprehend that she cannot possibly accept him as a lover. She gives him a job as a servant and he becomes an easy tool in the hand of a revolutionist.

The picture is happily free from heavy atmosphere—and it certainly has not gone "set." The players act with excellent restraint—and each one is splendidly cast. Barbara Bedford gives the role of the countess considerable poise and bearing. While Chaney has had better pictures and characterizations, this one won't take anything away from his popularity.

The Cast: Lon Chaney, Barbara Bedford, Ricardo Cortez, Mack Swain, Emily Fitzroy, Charley Puffy, Kai Schmidt. Director, Benjamin Christensen.

THEME: Drama of peasant's love for countess during the Russian revolution—and his supreme sacrifice for her.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The meeting of countess and peasant. The rescue of heroine. The comedy in the servant's quarters. The attack by the peasant. The Climax when he protects heroine. The simple sets. The retained acting. Chaney's make-up.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Bill as another triumph of Chaney's art. Play up the sympathy and heart appeal of story. Mention Ricardo Cortez.

DRAWING POWER: Rests with Chaney. He should draw them. O. K. for first runs and average houses.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Length, six reels. Released, August, 1927.

Modernized Arabian Knights Comedy

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

HERE is something different in the way of comedy. Set in period costuming of Arabian Knights days it is modernized by a lot of wise-cracking gags and a set of titles written by the late George Randolph Chester. When the Sultan, pleased with the beauty and grace of the charmer of the harem, asks Doug if she can dance, his prompt reply is, "and how?"

There is much about the picture that suggests a travesty on "The Thief of Bagdad." It has all the beautiful settings and costuming and it offers a splendid change from the usual comedy in the subtleness of its humor, which is fairly continuous, though the picture does drag a bit in spots.

Doug is not the dashing type of the other Doug in "The Thief"; not quite. He gets out of just as many situations, but he resorts more to strategy of mind than to nimbleness of foot. He too is a thief, who with his cohorts adopts the modern method of forward passing their swag. It surely is a laugh when Doug snatches a purse and a lateral and forward pass is made to deceive the victim.

It's a story so well done and with so much subtle humor that there seems little chance for it to miss.

The Cast: Douglas MacLean, Sue Carol, Richard Carle, Russell Powell, Frank Leigh, Wade Boteler, Nigel de Brulier, Albert Gran, Fred Kelsey, Harry Jones, Noble Johnson.

THEME: Modernized costume comedy of Arabian Knights' days in which the young thief outwits the high moguls and eventually wins the most beautiful slave in the harem of a dealer in virgins.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The elaborate sets and ebautiful costuming; the bevy of beautiful girls; the subtle comedy.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: The star and the exceptional cast: The wise-cracking titles of the late George Randolph Chester. The combination of the period costume comedy with the sure-fire modern gags.

DRAWING POWER: Good.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length seven reels. Released, August 27th.

The Fighting Eagle

Fair Enough Entertainment of its Kind

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A NAPOLEONIC background is employed in this picture, an adaptation of Conan Doyle's story, "The Exploits of Brigadier Gerard." It is fairly intelligent—and at times, adequately amusing, though one can never say that it packs any suspense or thrills. The director takes it lightly enough—and by doing so makes it into an acceptable film. It is all quite impossible as to plot but there is enough incident to make the patron overlook its faults.

It has for its central figure a young innkeeper who is something of a braggart. A pretty spy who knows her onions enlists the services of the hero in order to outwit a treacherous Tallyrand. He gets away with it and is rewarded with a commission and the heroine's love.

The picture gets off to a good start but it soon dissipates its few highlights. The humor which provided the good points does a fade-out. The finish shows an old-time situation—the hero being saved from the firing squad in the nick of time.

The best features are the captions, which are amusing and intelligent, and the capable acting of the cast. While Phyllis Haver has a more or less colorless role she makes the most of it. Rod La Rocque is a good choice as the boastful hero, but Max Barwyn plays Napoleon in the traditional manner. Which, of course, makes it a stereotyped performance.

The Cast: Rod La Rocque, Phyllis Haver, Max Barwyn, Sam De Grasse, Julia Faye, Clarence Burton, Alphonse Ethier. Director, Donald Crisp.

THEME: Romantic drama of innkeeper who falls in love with spy during reign of Napoleon and saves his emperor after much misunderstanding.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The settings. The acting by principals. The captions. The climax. The romantic interludes, etc.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up title and source of story. Mention as written by Conan Doyle. Feature Rod La Rocque and Phyllis Haver.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for average houses.

Produced by Cecil De Mille. Distributed by Pathe-De Mille. Length, seven reels. Released, August, 1927.

Smuggled Jewels and Government Agents

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

OBVIOUSLY produced without much pecuniary expenditure and yet telling a fairly good detective yarn, this latest adventure, which throws together Charles Hutchinson and Alice Calhoun once again, has enough to satisfy the patronage of the average neighborhood house.

The spinning of the web of circumstances is begun when some valuable jewels are smuggled past the customs inspectors. Hutchinson upon seeing them appears to want them very much; so does the girl. They both want the same thing and they both begin to feel that mutual attraction for each other so common in the movies. The man, thinking her a crook, suggests that they work together, but she spurns the idea. Eventually, however, she relents and is only too willing to accept aid from him. Their concerted efforts enable them to hurdle all the entanglements placed before them in the forms of other crooks, policemen and the like. Physical activity exemplified in wild automobile rides, a bucking motorcycle, climbing up the sides of buildings, fighting with a dozen crooks or more occur about this time and when all the excitement has quieted down, the crooks are gently removed to jail, the true character of Hutchinson and the girl are disclosed and everything ends in the customary manner.

The Cast: Charles Hutchinson, Alice Calhoun, Barbara Tennant, Paul Weigel, Harry Nerosses, James Bradbury, Jr., Frank Whitson. Directed by Howard Mitchell.

THEME: Melodrama. Jewels, smuggled into the country, cause man and girl to get on their trail. They think each other crooks and are suspected as such. After a series of difficulties, they obtain their object and enough evidence to send the rightful crooks to jail. They are revealed as government agents in the end.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The various encounters and battles of wit.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Ballyhoo in regular serial fashion.

DRAWING POWER: Good for the average audience.

Produced and distributed by Pathe. Released August 7, 1927. Length, 4620 feet.

MATTHIAS RADIN, A.B., LL.B., better known as "Matty," of the Commonwealth Film Exchange, has the distinction among film salesmen of having never lost an exhibitor-customer during his several years' association with the motion picture industry.

There is no particular mystery about the manner in which Mr. Radin has accomplished the above; in fact, the following rules, which he graciously explains, earned him the good graces of the trade, are those that could be applied to any other business—they need only to be carried faithfully out:

Matty's idea of a real salesman is: one who never makes a promise which he does not intend to carry out, or which he cannot carry out; one who never makes any statements about his wares unless he knows them to be positive—so qualifying his statements as to leave no room for any doubt with the exhibitor that it is partly conjecture or based upon certain information which he discloses. On these simple rules, Matty bases his success in this field.

"Madame Pompadour" — Paramount, Paramount Theatre, New York City

Daily Mirror: "Dorothy Gish . . . shows rare appreciation of her role. . . . And so, with aid of personable Moreno, Miss Gish has here nice treatment of grandiose-drama.

World: "As was the case with her "Nell Gwyn," one wonders why other Gish sister had been hiding her light all these years under bushel of more advertised member of family. For in this picture Dorothy Gish again displays histrionic talent . . . a talent made of substance and infinitely more plausible and convincing . . . thing beautifully unrolled by Miss Gish; excellent supporting cast."

Sun: "Sufficiently entertaining film . . . better than average. . . . Miss Gish, as usual, is whole show. . . . Will probably be fairly popular in these United States. . . . Also successful is performance of Antonio Moreno.

Brooklyn Eagle: "Let it be said that Dorothy Gish exudes more than modest sex appeal in magnificent characterization of Pompadour . . . Let it be reported, too, that Mr. Moreno's virile presence is eminently suited to role of passionate Rene Laval . . ."

American: "Will entertain you."

Morning Telegraph: "Dorothy (is) best actress in Gish family. To watch Dorothy Gish is joy. There is suspense in picture. For at any moment anything may happen. . . . rest of players competent. . . ."

Daily News: "Acting generally excellent. Miss Gish exquisite and Antonio Moreno loves her with exquisite technique. Henry Bosc did well as king . . ."

"Barbed Wire" — Paramount, Paramount Theatre, New York City

American: "War story from entirely new angle, sympathetically told and intensely interesting. . . . Miss Negri has seldom done better work. Looks slimmer and younger than ever . . ."

Sun: "Generally satisfying picture. . . . Pola Negri . . . gives brave and moving performance . . . at all times excellent."

Brooklyn Eagle: "Picture well directed, well acted and particularly pleasing. . . . Miss Negri gives as skillfull interpretation as any of her career. Supporting cast competent."

Wall Street Journal: . "Fine war story from new and human angle. Constantly holds attention, realism of plot being heightened by solidity and age-worn appearance of little French farm on which story takes place."

Telegram: "Excellent conceived and photographed film and one that you should see."

Morning World: "Belongs to new type of war picture which won approval first with 'The Big Parade.'"

"The Prince of Headwaiters"—First National, Washington Street Olympia Theatre, Boston

American: "It is one of exceptional pictures of season, with Mr. Stone in his most dramatic rôle."

Post: "Lewis Stone offers usual finished characterization. One of First National's best pictures of year. In usual quiet but forceful manner Mr. Stone gives great touch of reality and humanness to portrayal. Lewis Stone's best picture in months. Mr. Stone dominates film. Acting suave and easy, his portrayal of head waiter perfect in every detail. Film fairly rattles along. Carries no excess footage, does not take itself too seriously, and is bright and lively. Lilyan Tashman easily outdoes every one in cast except Mr. Stone, who cannot be outdone by any one."

Traveler: "The performance of this white-haired leading man makes picture diverting entertainment it is. Lilyan Tashman plays her part for all it is worth."

Herald: Story unusual in dramatic angles and brings little used theme—father love—to screen. Dramatic tale, thrilling climax."

'The Patent Leather Kid"—First National, Globe Theatre, New Yok City

Times: "Barthelmess excels any performance he has hitherto given. There is not single flaw in his acting. Mr. Santall, aside from realizing full pictorial values of his scenes, never permits them to interrupt trend of tale. First half of this production well nigh perfect in movement and in characterization. . . . Emphatically human chronicle, filled with incidents true to life and some really good comedy. Miss O'Day sincere and earnest."

News: "Barthelmess came back into his own. Public loudly and ardently applauded Dick's new achievement. A great picture; perhaps only war production yet filmed which has so big story behind it—delightful romance. Its sense of comedy delightful. Titles most laugh-enticing and generally well written we've read in cinema season. You'll enjoy every reel of it."

Herald-Tribune: "Highly entertaining work. Barthelmess convincing and stage perfect. Entertainment worth seeing. To its most minute detail a picture as perfect in stagecraft as is drama 'Broadway.' Mr. Santell accepts only that which is convincing, conceivable and realistic of life in realm of squared circle. Molly O'Day and Mathew Betz play with genuine realism and sympathy."

World: "Another set of battle scenes of finest, most natural order. Talking movie scenes injected during prize fight interesting and enhancing. Barthelmess does very well indeed. Molly O'Day handsome and capable new screen player."

Mirror: "Richly dressed production; unquestionably Barthelmess' most excellent screen offering since 'Tol'able David.' Has been splendidly photographed and appears more of his former self than of yore. Celuloider far above average. Beautiful photographic support. Molly O'Day distinctly different from ordinary run of leading women."

Telegram: "Makes an exceedingly smooth and entertaining mixture of its gloves and bayonets. Some of most skilled acting which has graced screen in some weeks is contained in narrative. One of best and most enjoyable pictures of year. Acting of both Barthelmess and Miss O'Day splendid. Arthur Stone xtremely amusing."

Sun: "Well acted and directed and photographed. . . with human touches and capable war spectacles."

Evening Post: Highly entertaining movie matter. Considerable credit for entertaining picture should go to Santell, who has chosen excellent cast and framed scenes splendidly. Barthelmess excellent throughout piece, and Molly O'Day deserves all sorts of pleasant adjectives. Will remain at Globe for some time to come."

"The Street of Sin," finished and pronounced in pre-views even superior to "Way of all Flesh." ¶ Why is "Wings"  instantly a $2. success at the Criterion, New York? Already classed by the industry with the two or three super-road shows of history. Packed houses and the biggest advance sale ever known. ¶ Why is "Beau Geste"  cleaning up everywhere? ¶ Why do we get scores of wires on "Chang"  like this one from the Stanley Co. of America: "'Chang' tremendous hit at Aldine, Philadelphia. Impossible to accommodate crowds. Record breaking engagement." 9 terrific weeks for "Chang" at the Rivoli, New York. Fenway, Boston; Roosevelt, Chicago; Million Dollar, Los Angeles; Lyceum, Duluth, and then after less than a month repeating its success at the Strand, same town—hit, hit, hit, everywhere. ¶ Why is Clara Bow in "Hula"  making "It" records look silly? With the Ambassador, St. Louis, high beaten already and skyrocket business at the Paramount, N. Y. ¶ Why was the run of "Metropolis,"  set for two weeks at the Roosevelt, Chicago, extended to four? ¶ Why did "Firemen, Save My Child"  break the two years' house record at the Rivoli, Portland, Ore.? And score a resounding hit at the Riviera, Omaha? Now set to follow "Underworld" for a long run at the Rivoli, New York. ¶ Why has "Rough Riders"  in San Antonio "rolled up the greatest gross a popular priced picture ever got in the State of Texas," according to the theatre's wire? Chosen from all the pictures in the industry by the Kansas City Star as the feature at its annual show, "Rough Riders" played to 60,000 people in one day, with 10,000 standees. ¶ Why is "Service for Ladies"  setting new highs for Adolphe Menjou?

100% program sensationally the country

¶ Why does the Cincinnati Post hail "Stark Love"  as "a great moment in our lives" and add: "A great picture has been born and shown. So real, so terribly real, so beautiful that it makes ash-faced anemics of studio productions!" ¶ Why has "Barbed Wire"  knocked the opposition in Buffalo and scores of other towns galley-west? ¶ Why have resounding hits been scored by Douglas MacLean in "Soft Cushions,"  Dorothy Gish and Tony Moreno in "Mme. Pompadour"?  ¶ Why has Paramount News leaped into instant success with public and exhibitors alike? Revealing from its very first issue a news reel in advance of anything ever seen before. ¶ Why are Paramount shorts—Christie comedies, Horton comedies, Novelties, Krazy Kat and Inkwell Imps cartoons, so consistently, amazingly good? Why is Paramount so far, far ahead of the field this new season? Why has this one company been able to pour out hit after hit week after week? Exactly on release dates. ¶ The glory of it is that the pictures already released are only the start! 60 more of them are coming! Attractions like Harold Lloyd, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," Fred Thomson in "Jesse James," Beau Sabreur," Emil Jannings in "The Street of Sin," and more, Clara Bow in "Red Hair" and others, Richard Dix in "Shanghai Bound," Conklin and Bancroft in "Tell it to Sweeney," "Tillie's Punctured Romance," Beery-Hatton in "Now We're in the Air" and more, Fields-Conklin in "Side Show" and more, Meighan, Negri, Ralston, Vidor, Zane Grey, George Bancroft (a star by unanimous popular acclaim after "Underworld")—to name but a few. Why is Paramount's record this year the talk of the nation?

because it's a new era in the show business and Paramount alone is making the new era type of picture!

¶ Because Paramount alone has a producing organization alive and geared up to the exacting standards of the times. Because while other companies slept, Paramount was developing a Jannings, a Bow, a Beery-Hatton, a Bancroft, pioneering, daring to make the "Changs," the "Underworlds," the "Way of All Fleshes." Because while other companies thought the old stuff would get money in 1927, Paramount sensed a shrewder, smarter public hot for something better and different. ¶ Paramount bought a new, enlarged studio, expanded its organization, packed it with new young talent and bent every energy and resource to making a group of pictures that would write box office history! They're writing it. You know it! ¶ Have you got Paramount's 100% Program? How can you, your business, your investment do without it? You exhibitors are not saps; you're smart business men. That's why Paramount has closed more contracts, big and small, in less time this season than at any time in its 16 years in business. There isn't an exhibitor in the country who can keep these pictures away from his public. There isn't a sensible exhibitor who can afford to have his opposition playing them!

Act Now!

Arbitration Board Necessary Immediately in Labor Crisis

By William A. Johnston

THE Chicago strike situation threatens to become nation-wide, which might mean the closing of all picture theatres in which there are union employees.

In other words, it is entirely possible that, if attempts are made to reopen the Chicago houses with non-union help, the I. A. T. S. E. might step in and call a national sympathetic strike of operators, stage hands, musicians and others.

This might spread, of course, to other branches of the industry in which there are union employees, such as studio electricians and carpenters, and, in the East, cameramen.

If this happens, the industry will be completely tied up. Differences with unions on various matters have been in the air for some time, and the Chicago situation, as we go to press, has apparently brought matters to a crisis.

In this grave situation, we believe constructive steps should be taken at once.

We urge that, following the precedents in other industries, a National Board of Arbitration should be formed immediately. It should consist of one member of the industry, a leader representing union labor, and a representative of the public.

In creating such a Board, the parties in disagreement should be represented as a matter of course. But the public should also be represented, because the motion picture is a great public utility, and the public is vitally concerned in the present situation.

We believe the leaders of the industry should immediately take steps to form such a Board. Even if the Chicago situation should be adjusted by the time this editorial appears, we still believe the Board should be formed, ready to function in this or any other similar crisis.

This is by no means merely a local situation. It is nation-wide in importance and gravity and should be dealt with through a National Board of Arbitration. It seems to us that no other method will prove effective in the long run; and we also believe that the suggestion we make is practical.

The time to act is now. The step suggested is constructive and fair to all. We urge immediate action.

Comment on "God Bless Movie Critics!"

PUBLICATION in Motion Picture News of Warren Nolan's articles, "God Bless the Movie Critics!" has drawn comment in many quarters in and out of the industry.

Robert E. Sherwood, editor of Life and famed movie critic, devoted his entire column in the New York Evening Post last Saturday to a discussion of Mr. Nolan's views. The Sherwood articles are syndicated by the Bell Syndicate to about thirty of the biggest newspapers in the country.

Typical of comments in the industry is the following letter to William A. Johnston from Samuel Spring, secretary-treasurer of First National:

"May I not send you a word of congratulation on the excellent article entitled 'God Bless the Movie Critics!' which appeared in the last issue of your valuable Motion Picture News? Mr. Warren Nolan has written with courage and discernment, and to my thinking he is entirely sound in his point of view. No artistic creative work has ever attained marked success, without the guidance of sound, thoughtful standards of criticism, and I think that you and Mr. Nolan are to be congratulated in pointing out that all of us engaged in the field of motion pictures can well afford to give our thought toward aiding those who are criticising our pictures in indicating those standards.

"Unquestionably motion picture critics must be free from the slightest suggestion of control or subsidy. They have valiantly carried on their work despite many difficulties; but if the industry can use its influence to persuade the newspaper proprietors to take the field of motion picture criticism a bit more seriously and to aid by better pay and more favorable conditions of employment those whom they assign to that work, I am certain that our industry will be greatly benefited. After all, no one wants poor pictures, and higher standards of criticism make for better pictures.

"Kindly call upon me for anything I can do to aid in this valuable work."

The author of the articles has received this letter from Joseph McElliott, film critic of The New York Mirror:

"A proof of your article in Motion Picture News has been sent me. It appears to me that this is an excellent commentary on my own, and, as your article indicates, your former job.

"Nor will be out of place for me to write you to that effect."

In his article for the Bell Syndicate, Mr. Sherwood took exception to Mr. Nolan's point that critics should report audience reactions rather than their own personal opinions. Mr. Sherwood said in part:

"If a critic is writing for a trade paper which goes to exhibitors whose one thought is for possible profits, he should view a picture simply and solely as a piece of merchandise and judge it accordingly. But if he is writing for a newspaper or magazine, whose readers are looking for his advice, he should crusade vehemently for that which he thinks is right and against that which he thinks is wrong. The thought that a picture which he dislikes will appeal to an enormous number of people should carry no weight with him whatever.

"This sounds like an arrogant point of view, and the sound is not deceptive. Every worth while critic in every branch of art has been arrogant; he has assumed that his opinions are better than the opinions of any one else, his fellow critics included."

Katz, in Exclusive Interview, Discusses Publix Plans

By William A. Johnston

(Copyright, 1927, by Motion Picture News, Inc. Republication rights granted provided full credit is given)

SAM KATZ, President of Publix Theatres, gave me an interesting interview last week. Just back from a rest trip to Europe and vigorously at his job, he talked frankly and for the first time about Publix theatres presentations.

"There has been from the beginning, just one big idea back of Publix presentations," he said. "That was to build in the public mind the belief that a Publix theatre is a class theatre, a type of theatre different from any other theatre.

"It has been a big undertaking, a far step ahead, but the result has been worth the effort.

"The thing has been accomplished. You might call it an advertising campaign; certainly it has been a building campaign.

"And now that it has been accomplished, now that we have established in the public mind just this conception of the Publix theatre, we now propose to make the second step and that will be to give the public just the type of presentation they want.

"If they want it 'red,' we'll give it to them. If they want 'gold' we'll give them 'gold.' This will be easier than the first step.

"Certain facts must be borne in mind:

"A new type of theatre exists today. The investment is very large, greater than was ever dreamed of. The nut of these luxurious theatres is as high as $35,000 a week, without the cost of the show itself.

"Now, the show has got to be in keeping. It's got to be a big show. Also it must pull and keep pulling a high admission price.

"Not only that, but you must have ample protection on motion pictures. And you must have ample protection on presentations. You cannot expect people to pay seventy-five cents for that which they can see a week or so later for fifteen cents."

"In other words," said I, "you seek to widen keep wide the gap between the high admission and the low admission house?"

"Exactly," he replied.

"How about the secondary house—the one that charges forty cents?" I asked.

"Well, there comes up another problem," Mr. Katz said. "This house often runs vaudeville. Presentations are expensive, but vaudeville has become very expensive. Both are too expensive for this admission charge.

Sam Katz, President of Publix Theatres

"As presentation people we say to the vaudeville circuits: 'You take off vaudeville and we'll keep presentations from the secondary runs.'

"To which they reply: 'Vaudeville is an established institution.'

"Well, that may be true; but it's just as true that a combination vaudeville and picture bill is unfair competition with a straight picture bill."

"Have you completed your Publix expansion program?" was my next question.

"No," Mr. Katz replied, "but in pushing our Publix policy ahead we are forming local unit partnerships in the case of our secondary theatres. We are placing these under the management of men who are thoroughly familiar with the communities.

"We are giving these theatres the local touch, but they still remain Publix houses, and are operated under these local unit partnerships by

Inside Slants on the Industry

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

COMES now "Underworld" to furnish additional proof that fine pictures are still being made—and what is more, are pulling crowds all by themselves.

After running at the Paramount Theatre, New York, for a week, and coming within $30 of the house record, this picture has moved up the street to the Rivoli where it is in for a run.

It is blood-and-thunder melodrama, but real motion picture all the way. The story is perfectly simple, but how it has been handled! Corking stuff—put on the screen the way pictures ought to be put there.

After seeing "Underworld," one is impatient with the great mass of studio drivel turned out under the name of pictures. But—if this film is a sample of what the new season will bring, Hollywood will be forgiven many of its production sins of the past.

YOU never can tell. "Underworld" was directed by Josef von Sternberg, whose "Salvation Hunters" was one of the prize box-office bloomers. Sternberg has done a wonderful job with "Underworld." All credit to him! He has left the "arty" critics high and dry, and in "Underworld" has shown the real art that has made the motion picture great.

THE "What Price Glory" engagement at the Roxy has hung up a record which seems likely to stand for some time to come. The picture is completing its third week, and the total number of dollars grossed, by the time the week ends, will be approximately 412,000.

In the first two weeks, a gross of $282,161.60 was recorded. The pace this week indicated that this figure would be swelled by about $130,000.

When a picture—and it was the picture chiefly without doubt—does better than $400,000 at one theatre in three weeks, who can say what the ultimate possibilities of this industry are?

"LES MISERABLES" continues to be the surprise picture of Broadway. As we pointed out last week, it has production defects, but these very evidently do not count when balanced against the immortal story of Victor Hugo, with which the public is very familiar.

Also, the great humanness of the novel has been put on the screen in a sincere and appealing way. Capacity business is being recorded, and Universal is considering roadshowing the film.

AS for "The Patent Leather Kid," First National announced this week that the lease of the Globe Theatre, where it is playing, has been extended to January 1, after which it is planned to release the picture as a special for first-run theatres.

The total gross, as we went to press, was announced as $48,263.50, indicating clearly enough that an extended run is justified. This picture is a corking good special, not quite in the roadshow class, as we pointed out after its opening, an opinion which has now been ratified by First National's decision to release it as a special to the first-runs.

STILL another capacity picture on Broadway is "Wings," for which a phenomenal advance sale is claimed by the Paramount roadshow department. During the period August 12-25, advance sales were recorded as follows: August 12, $8,531; August 13, $8,677; August 14, $7,359; August 15, $8,268; August 16, $12,060; August 17, $13,169; August 18, $15,491; August 20, $21,612; August 21, $19,784; August 22, $21,239; August 23, $20,146; August 24, $18,783; August 25, $19,462.

These figures, announced by A. Griffith Grey, represent what is believed to be a record for advance sales for picture specials—and by a large margin.

ALL of which proves that fine pictures will get, and are getting, big money at the box-office. Not a single one of these Broadway runs depends upon anything but the picture—properly presented.

IT pays to read. A member of the advertising department of a film company, which is releasing a picture with a foreign story, suggested the other day to his company's space-buyer that it would be a good idea to advertise the picture in a certain foreign language newspaper of big circulation.

"That's a fine idea," the space-buyer replied, "In fact, I thought so well of it that I placed advertising in that paper on the picture six weeks ago."

FROM time to time, reports drift in from Hollywood about "The Wedding March," upon which Eric von Stroheim has been engaged for fifteen months. The cost, to date, is said to be around $2,000,000, and the footage "shot" by Stroheim totaled 200 reels.

After many months, the director succeeded in getting the footage down to 27 reels, but, of course, that is much too long to be shown in one night. So P. A. Powers, who is the financial backer of the picture, is said to have broken with von Stroheim, and employed Josef von Sternberg to cut the picture to the required twelve reels.

RAY HALL, editor of Pathe News, has some interesting ideas on the bigger meaning of news reels to the public. "Movies teach quicker than books," he points out. "I took my daughter to see a moving picture of the life of Lincoln, and, in two hours, she absorbed a more correct idea of his personality than I had obtained from reading twenty volumes of biography about him. The news reel deserves even more credit, because it is the one agency which has forgotten the necessity for fiction and invention, which does not depend on pretty faces and which never falsifies life."

The news reel, he continues, has also been a great factor in giving us a common national feeling, and has aided tremendously in welding these United States into one great sympathetic nation.

"It has revealed facts through the length and breadth of the land that were never disclosed before. During the Civil War, mothers sat home, reading well-censored dispatches from the front. During the late war, they saw with their own eyes, through the reels, what a battle really is.

"President Harding, the first candidate to be publicized after news reels became a factor, gained tremendous popularity through his genial screen personality. He made millions of friends in this way, and, when he died, the most touching sentiment was shown by the waiting crowds as his train came East.

Principals and some of the types that will be seen in the spectacular Metro-Goldwyn picture made abroad by Rex Ingram, "The Garden of Allah." It is scheduled to have its premiere at the Embassy Theatre in New York the night of September 2nd. From left to right in the cut are, Claude Fielding, Ben Sadour, Alice Terry, Ivan Petrovich, Madame Parquet.

Carl Dane, hero of M-G-M's "Big Parade" is helping in every way with the Greater Movie Season on the West Coast. Here he is shown dealing tickets from the box office

Harold Lloyd is among the late arrivals in New York. He is to shoot scenes here for his newest Paramount comedy, so he brought the family with him. Mrs. Lloyd and Mildred Gloria are shown with the comedian on their arrival at Penn. station

Nicholas Longworth, Speaker of the House, was a recent visitor at M. G. M. studios, where he was received by Marion Davies, Cosmopolitan Star and Sam Wood, director of her latest vehicle, "The Fair Co-ed."

Pictures and People–Continued

"A high politician told me there was no doubt that Harding's popularity was because he had become personally acquainted with everyone in the country, through his appearance in the news reels."

* * *

IN the past, exploitation men in the picture business have drawn bank president salaries for enticing lions into hotel rooms with attendant newspaper space that never got any publicity for the picture it was supposed to advertise beyond the domains of the film curb, but recently the industry has come nearer to the ethics accepted in the more stable lines of trade and tried to make the press agent a purveyor of real news.

PERHAPS the finest example of this sort of publicity is the Will Rogers dinner given by the National Press Club at Washington, in which "A Texas Steer" (Sam Rork First National) and the entire cast of the picture were most effectively sold to millions of people who listened in over the radio. Forty stations of the National Broadcasting Company were hooked in on the banquet and the daily newspapers all over the country carried headline stories not only about the banquet and what Mr. Rogers said in his speech but also a great amount of detail about the picture, who was in it, who the producer was and the distributor.

'T HIS amount of advertising could not have been purchased at any price. No amount of advertising, in the ordinary sense, could have sold the desire to see a motion picture as this broadcasting of the dinner did.

And the moral of it all is that neither newspapers, broadcast station nor the Associated Press held up their hands in holy horror, yelling "press agent and publicity" and they didn't have to be tricked into something that would leave a bad effect.

The dinner was news, Mr. Rogers was news, George Marion with his wonderful reading of a line or two from his old role in the original play was news and all this made the rest of the cast, the producer and the distributor, news.

Without a doubt no picture has ever had such a wonderful send off. There is only one regret and that "A Texas Steer" isn't ready for that fifty million public that was "sold" Saturday night.

M. J. O'TOOLE, Business Manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, writes us:

"I read with much interest your excellent editorial 'The Yardstick' in the current issue of Motion Picture News. I must agree with you as I have been preaching that doctrine in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as an official of the organization and in the ranks since my affiliation with the same in 1921.

"You declare with complete truth that public good-will is the motion picture industry's greatest asset. Our National organization is on record along that line for years. We have preached and practiced it and it is this accumulation of goodwill that has stopped the march of censorship and special taxes in the Nation and in the States. Despite the mistakes made, the color given to questionable moves, personal and otherwise, in the industry and the occasional seeming defiance of public opinion on the part of the few, we have been able to build up such a treasure of good-will that the other elements were entirely outweighed.

"No industry in the world needs a greater measure of public goodwill than ours. It is our business oxygen, without which it is doomed to decay and death. Yet it is difficult to have certain elements agree on this and their unethical moves at times render progress uncertain."

Mr. O'Toole quotes from his report as Chairman of the M.P.T.O.A. Public Service Committee to the 1924 Boston Convention, in which he gave the exhibitor some excellent advice on how to become a real leader in his community.

PEACE has been declared or at least a truce is in effect on the lower East Side of New York City where for a long period a booking battle has waged between the theatre circuits of Loew, Inc., Mayer & Schneider and the Delancey-Clinton Corp. The theatre holding of Mayer & Schnieder and the Delancey-Clinton Corp. aggregate from forty odd houses while several of the Loew theatres are located in this section at strategic points.

Now, all is serene, it is declared, for within the past two weeks a reported entente cordiale in the form of a booking agreement has been arranged between the three belligerents, thus dealing somewhat of a solar plexus blow to some of the New York exchangemen, who heretofore have been reaping the fruits of the battle.

DESPITE the fact that it has been raining every other hour or so in New York for several weeks, golf gets in its innings whenever possible. And film men continue to distinguish themselves at the ancient game.

For example, at the Rye Country Club the other day, A. W. Smith, Jr., Eastern salesmanager of First National, and Walter Futter, producer of "Curiosities of the Screen," won places as runners-up for the Governor's Cup of the Rye Club.

Which also reminds us that the semi-annual Film Golf Tournament, one of the big events of New York fildom, will take place this Fall at the Bonnie Briar Club, Larchmont, and a record turnout is a safe prediction.

men trained in Publix ideas. It is a partnership of collective brains—a policy which we believe will be eminently successful.

"We are much interested in the small towns; and we are creating the small town Publix theatre, just as we are also specializing in the big key city house. What our policy will be in the small towns we don't know yet. It may not be presentations. Perhaps it will be the 'sound' movies, or something else—or just pictures.

"And here is a fact which I believe the industry is not aware of: eighty-five per cent of the Publix theatres today run only pictures and music."

Finally, Mr. Katz spoke of the situation in Minneapolis with Finkelstein & Ruben.

"We expect to co-operate in that city," he said. "The details have not yet been worked out."

Revenue Bureau Reports $6,000,000 Drop in Admission Tax for Year

A DROP of over $6,000,000 in admission taxes collected during the fiscal year 1927, as compared with the preceding year, is shown by figures just compiled by the Internal Revenue Bureau of the Treasury Department.

The decline is due to the change in the 1926 law, increasing the exemption from from 50 to 75 cents. The increase in exemption relieved all but a comparatively few motion picture theaters in the very largest cities from all tax, and resulted in cutting the Government's revenue from this scource from $23,980,676.66 during the fiscal year 1926 to $17,940,636.69 during the fiscal year ended June 30, last.

The widespread freedom from tax which is now enjoyed by exhibitors is indicated by the fact that more than $14,750,000 in admission taxes was collected in nine States and but slightly over $3,000,000 was collected in the remaining 39. New York State, of course, paid the greatest total, $6,785,925, followed by Illinois, $2,029,755; Pennsylvania, $1,556,998; California, $1,357,746; Massachusetts, $850,493; Ohio, $734,931; Michigan, $515,937; New Jersey, $484,155; and Missouri, $435,047.

Texas Attorney General Launches Probe

Complaints Against Block Booking Bring Action in Houston and Dallas

TEXAS is in the throes of a probe by Attorney General Pollard which will take up various phases of the motion picture industry, following complaints that have come from many different parts of the state for a period of several years. The investigation, now well under way, has for its main objective the consideration of the legality of operations and prying into the activities of the Film Boards of Trade.

Block booking is one of the main considerations under the scrutiny of the Attorney General and it is said he will delve into this problem. He was spurred on in this direction largely as the result of complaints made by a group of exhibitors in Houston, and also from exhibitors in other parts of the state.

Just what effect this investigation will have in the premises is largely problematical and there is a more or less general feeling that no serious complications will develop. When the Film Board of Trade was organized several years ago great care was taken in mapping out its program in accordance with state law as it then affected the industry and it is on those laws that the Film Board is ready to stand by its actions.

The film interests in the controversy will be well protected as they are in the competent hands of former Senator J. J. Strickland, associated with Publix as head of the Public Relations department, who is thoroughly familiar with all angles of the situation in Texas.

That the Attorney General's office is to pry deeply into the affairs of the industry is shown by the fact that Assistant Attorney General Joe Brown was in Dallas recently visiting exchanges in connection with the investigation, and at the same time Attorney General Pollard was in Houston on the same mission.

That block booking is the principal cause for the launching of the investigation there seems little doubt in Texas. There has been agitation over this matter for a long time past and it has been the subject of many complaints made to the state by exhibitors. The claim has frequently been made that exhibitors have been forced to purchase the entire output of certain producers or to book a limited number of films at prohibitive prices. Recently a Dallas exhibitor sent a representative to Houston to confer with other exhibitors and the Attorney General concerning the present investigation. It is expected that the probe will be in operation for some time before a decision is handed down.

Censorship Measure for Bellingham

Not to be outdone by its larger neighbor, Seattle, the city of Bellingham, Washington, last week discussed in its City Council a new motion picture censorship ordinance —the first of its kind in the city, introduced at the behest of the Bellingham W. C. T. U. The proposed measure would entitle the mayor of the city to appoint nine members of a Film Censorship Board, one member of which shall be an owner or general manager of a theatre. The members hold office for a sliding scale of years, and will serve without salary.

All pictures to be shown on Bellingham screens are to be shown privately before the Board for approval, and no exhibitor shall show a film not approved by the National Board of Censorship or by the Board of Theatre Supervisors in Bellingham.

Penn. Grants Charters to New Concerns

Pennsylvania has granted a number of charters for new amusements during the past week. Principal among these was one to Nathan Appell, Inc., of York. The new corporation is allied with the Nathan Appell Enterprises. It has a capitalization of $5,000, of which $500 has been paid in, and the par value of the shares is $100.

The Vemark Theatre Company of Oil City also obtained a charter at Harrisburg. The nominal capitalization is $5,000 with $500 paid on the basis of $100 par value. John B. Veach of Oil City is the treasurer. This company has under construction a modern theatre in Oil City, where it also controls another house.

The Pearl Amusement Company of Philadelphia with $10,000 capitalization and $1,000 paid in was also granted a charter, as was the Superior Motion Picture Supply Company of Pittsburgh, capitalized at $10,000, of which $1,000 is paid on the basis of $100 par value a share.

Minister Aids Campaign for Sunday Movies

Rev. Lascelles Ward, pastor of an Episcopalian church in Massena, N. Y., aided last week the campaign being conducted in that place for Sunday movies. In a public statement, Rev. Mr. Ward declared that he believed that Sunday shows would serve to keep many young people away from questionable resorts.

The minister said that he had been spending a greater part of this summer in Ogdensburg, where he had an excellent opportunity of noting the effect of Sunday shows in that city. He further said that there should be no objection to Sunday movies so long as they did not run at hours that might prevent persons from attending church service.

United Artists' Employees Hold First Outing

The first annual outing of United Artists' employees was held August 27th at Nassau Shores, Amityville, L. I., with more than 250 in attendance. It was a most enjoyable affair, with the arrangements in charge of Norris Wilcox, Bruce Gallup and Pearl Blackwell.

Included among those who attended were: Arthur W. Kelly and Harry D. Buckley, vice-presidents; and Moxley Hill and Paul Lazarus, divisional general sales managers. The prizes for the various competitions were donated by Mary Pickford, Gloria Swanson, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, D. W. Griffith, Joseph M. Schenck and Samuel Goldwyn.

City of Quebec Enacts Poster Tax By-law

The City of Quebec has enacted a poster tax bylaw, the revenue of which, through poster taxes, is to be used to defray the cost of the new poster censor board which is patterned after the poster censorship plan of the City of Montreal. The latter has been in operation for the past three years under the direction of Martin Singher, a former newspaper man.

National Labor Crisis Looms; Chicago Theatres Closed

Tie-Up of Windy City Houses Practically 100%; Serious Situation in Many Other Cities, With Threatened Walk-Outs

WITH picture theatres in Chicago closed practically 100 per cent, as a result of the lockout of operators on Monday, a crisis of national proportions appeared possible as this issue went to press.

The closing order was issued by President Jack Miller, of the Exhibitors' Association of Chicago, and affected 380 picture and vaudeville theatres of the city of Chicago and Cook County. Both union and exhibitor officials announced that it would be a fight to the finish.

The Chicago situation might become national in scope, in case attempts were made to reopen the theatres there with non-union help, it was pointed out by William Canavan, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and M. P. Machine Operators, with headquarters in New York. In that event, a sympathetic strike might be called throughout the country.

The other serious angle in the situation was the threatened walkouts in many cities, including Washington, Baltimore, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Dallas, Houston, Fort Worth, Newark and Harrisburg, Pa.

Tie-up is Complete

On Thursday the tie-up of Chicago theatres became practically complete, and the city and county were filmless. The total revenue of the theatres involved is about $225,000 daily; 25,000 employees are out of work.

Further complications loomed, as contracts with both the musicians' and stage hands' unions terminate this week, and demands which exhibitors regard as exorbitant were presented at meetings held between exhibitors and officials of these two unions. No progress toward settlement was made, both sides standing firm in their refusal to yield.

Contrary to previous reports, it was announced in Chicago on Thursday that film service in the city and Cook County has not been discontinued by the exchangemen and the Film Board of Trade.

The controversy which caused the closing of the Chicago theatres started when the operators' union demanded that four operators employed by Lubliner & Trinz should be retained after this theatre was transferred to the Orpheum Circuit, the latter changing its policy from that of a picture house to a vaudeville theatre.

The Orpheum offered to retain two operators and arbitrate the matter of using four. This arbitration was refused by Business Agent Tom Malloy, and a strike was caused on all Orpheum houses in Chicago. In the meantime, the Exhibitors' Association of Chicago held a mass meeting at which a resolution was adopted that all theatres close if the operators' unions called a strike against the Orpheum houses.

Unique Situation

The demands of the musicians' union, which may further complicate the situation, include abrogation of the arbitration agreement, seven days' pay for six days' work and the installation of four-piece orchestras in sixty theatres for 52 weeks, many of these houses now being without orchestras. The stage hands' union is demanding a pay increase of 25 per cent, and changes in their working conditions.

Immediately following the Iroquois Theatre fire a quarter of a century ago, Chicago theatres of all kinds were closed, and during the flu epidemic they were closed for a day, but the present action of the theatre owners is unique as it closes, for the first time in the history of the city, all classes of houses from the Chicago Capitol, Oriental, etc., down to the three hundred seat theatres, by the voluntary action of the owners.

At a mass meeting of the Exhibitors' Association, held on Tuesday, a rousing vote of confidence was given to President Miller and his committee, who were instructed to fight to a finish. Many big exhibitors stated that they were prepared to keep their theatres closed for months, if necessary.

Trouble in Many Cities

Reports of the labor situation in other cities follow:

Los Angeles—Stage hands have asked for a substantial increase, which exhibitors declare they cannot meet. It was expected that a decision would be reached on Thursday as this issue went to press. The union officials announced that unless the exhibitors met their terms a strike would be called.

Elizabeth, N. J.—A strike was called at the Strand, Royal and Gaiety theatres, and an effort is being made to secure an injunction against the operators' local from interfering with employes of these houses. The hearing will come up before the vice-chancellor on Sept. 13. Meanwhile, the operators are back at work.

San Francisco—Last minute efforts are being made to avert a walkout in negotiations between exhibitors of this city and Oakland operators and stage hands. Both classes of employees are seeking higher wages.

Washington, D. C.—Exhibitors, headed by A. Julian Brylawski, held conferences with business agents of the musicians' and stage hands' unions in an effort to avert a walkout. A new scale of wages and working conditions were sought by the unions.

Atlanta—Demands of the local motion picture machine operators for an increase of $20.00 a week over the scale prevailing during the season just passed has precipitated a controversy with theatre and union executives that may not be smoothed out for some weeks to come.

When the new scale was presented theatre managers protested against the increase, claiming that the current year has been one of the hardest since 1921 and citing the general depression in box-office receipts for the past seven months as proof that theatres could not stand the increase.

Atlanta Looks Ahead

Several conferences have been held, but so far little progress has been made in reaching a mutually agreeable solution. However, Atlanta theatre managers have protected themselves by agreeing to start the new season (September 5th) on a basis that will make any new and final agreement with the Atlanta local of Motion Picture Machine Operators retroactive to that date.

New contracts have already been closed with musicians who asked no increase; and stage employees are working under a two-year contract, which has another year to run, so no difficulty has presented itself except in the case of the operators whose demands for so large an increase have been th source of considerable speculation.

Toronto—A serious labor situation has developed in the Toronto, Ontario, theatre field as a result of the demands of the Musicians' Union for substantial increases in wages, the owners having notified the union that they will not consider the request for a higher scale. Moreover, the exhibitors have been advertising for musicians, projection machine operators, stage hands and electricians to take the place of employees in case of a strike, announcement being made that preference will be given to returned soldiers.

It is declared by leading theatre managers that more applications have been received for the jobs than will be required to fill the vacancies in case of a general walkout. On the other hand, J. Weatherburn, business agent of the Toronto musicians, declares that this is all bluff because, he says, qualified musicians and operators are not available outside of organized labor ranks.

Activity Organized On Protection

Cleveland Exhibitors Quizz Exchanges on Policy; Other Cities Force Issue

ORGANIZED activity on the part of exhibitors in many cities promises to bring to a crisis in the near future the matter of first run protection policy by distributing companies. Little in the way of definite announcement has been made yet, but there is every indication that steps must be taken without much delay if the buying market is to be stimulated.

A definite stand has been taken by the Cleveland exhibitors' association with the urging of limitations on extended protection. The association has forwarded a letter to exery exchange in the city requesting a definite statement of its first run protection policy for the season of 1927-28.

The letter urges that pictures receiving seven consecutive days' first run be available to members of the association for forty-third day following said run, and that pictures receiving fourteen or more consecutive days' first run shalll be available to members of the association on the fifty-seventh day following said run. The letter asked that such conditions be inserted in contracts.

Fourteen replies to the letter from exchanges have been received by Secretary George Erdmann. Of these, ten exchange managers agreed to the terms and four were noncommittal. The exchanges that agreed are Universal, F. B. O., Fischer Film Exchange, Columbia, Fox, Tiffany, Pathe, feature department; Education, Standard Film Service Company and United Artists. Paramount, First National, Warners and the Pathe short subject division were noncommittal and M. G. M. did not answer.

Complaints and a protest have been lodged by the M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania with a number of producer-distributors regarding new protection periods for certain of Pittsburgh's down-town first runs and circuit theatres. The exhibitors claim to have learned that some of these houses were to be granted longer protection periods by distributors.

The fight of the larger first run theatres for longer protection rights within a 60-mile radius of Kansas City has by no means come to a close, but thus far no exchanges have agreed to the concessions sought by the larger houses, it is said. It is believed, however, that some agreement may be reached concerning protection of Kansas City, Mo., theatres in Kansas City, Kas., a city of 135,000, although not as drastic a protection as is sought by the Kansas City, Mo., theatres. Extended protection against theatres within sixty miles of Kansas City will not be granted by Kansas City exchanges, it virtually is understood.

New York Conference Discusses Allocation of First Runs in Greater City

AT the instigation of Will H. Hays, a conference was held in New York last week in an effort to adjust the allocation of first runs in Greater New York to meet the complaints of unfair treatment charged by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce.

The conference brought together S. R. Kent of Paramount, Andrew W. Smith, Jr., of First National, Charles Moskowitz of Loew's, Inc., with Sol Raives, president of the T. O. C. C. and a committee composed of Arthur Hirsh, Leo Brecher and Harry Suchman. No definite understanding was arrived at, but some action will be taken after Labor Day.

The conference suggested by Hays came following a mass meeting of the T. O. C. C. held on July 14th, at which a resolution was adopted condemning the first-run situation in the greater city. The resolution, among other things, charged the confining of first runs to producer-owned theatres. It alleged that it resulted in stunting the development of the independent theatre owner and that the practice was unfair to the public.

Lichtman Makes Changes in Sales Staff

SEVERAL major changes in positions and personnel of the United Artists sales organization are announced by Al Lichtman, vice-president and general manager of distribution for the company. The position of divisional sales manager has been discontinued. The eastern, western, southern and mid-western divisions have been merged into one unit, and the three executives advanced to new duties.

Paul N. Lazarus has been promoted to the newly-created post of Sales Promotion Manager. Cresson E. Smith has been elevated to the post of Assistant General Sales Manager, and Mozley A. Hill has been made maanger of the newly-created contract department.

David Bershon and Edward Lindeman, whose appointments as special representatives had been announced, will spend the greater part of their time in visiting exchanges throughout the country and working in the field.

To Urge British Empire Films in Canada

Following the tour of Canada by Sir Henry Cowan, member of the British House of Commons who has been most active in seeking a film quota law for Great Britain, there is definite intimation that the National officers of the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire in the Dominion will urge upon the members of the Canadian Parliament that measures leading to the encouragement of British Empire-made films in Canada are desired.

It is declared that the next session of the Canadian House of Commons at Ottawa, starting probably in January, will use a debate regarding the question of legislative assistance for moving pictures produced in Canada, Great Britain and other parts of the Empire.

The six months' figures include its $479,415.55 undistributed share of earnings of the Balaban & Katz Corporation, a 65 per cent owned subsidiary.

After allowing for payment of dividends on the preferred stock, the above earnings amount to $2.27 per share for the three months and $5.60 per share for the six months, on the common stock outstanding.

Six R. I. Houses Closed in Safety Drive

Attorney General Charles P. Sisson of Rhode Island last week ordered six theatres closed in the safety drive to make theatres comply with regulations set forth in recently enacted rules. The closing orders were the result of reports submitted by state police inspectors. Two of the houses made alterations and were allowed to reopen.

Inspection was made on 43 houses. Closings were ordered in most instances for general infractions, such as ladders and other obstructions being permitted in exit aisles, and littered conditions in projection booths. Cases were found where fireproof stairways do not exist in conformity to the new rules.

As soon as the inspection of all town theatres is completed, which will take about two weeks, the inspectors will re-check the theatres to see that changes have been made where ordered to meet with the approval of the new rules.

Griffith Plans Three for United Artists

Lillian Gish will not appear in any of the next three pictures produced by D. W. Griffith for United Artists, according to the schedule announced by the producer. In denying a published rumor as unfounded, in fairness to Miss Gish, he said her appearance in forthcoming Griffith pictures had not been considered or discussed.

The first of the Griffith pictures will be "A Romance of Old Spain" with Mary Philbin and Don Alvarado. The title, incidentally has been changed to "Drums of Love," and Tully Marshall has been signed to play the role of the Jester.

Plans are nearing completion for Griffith to produce "Sunny,' which will mark Constance Talmadge's debut as a United Artist star. "Sunny" was the musical comedy in which Marilyn Miller scored such a success.

The third Griffith production contemplated is "La Paiva," an original story of the Napoleon III court written by Dr. Karl Vollmoeller, author of the book of "The Miracle."

British Take U. S. Angle

American Players and American Ideas Being Used in Many Studios

By ELIZABETH LONERGAN

Staff Correspondent of Motion Picture News and Kinematograph Weekly

WHETHER it is deliberate or not, there seems to be an American angle, at times almost invisible, in the British Studios which I have visited.

Recently I travelled down to the Gaumont Studio where Colonel Bromhead was holding a sort of open house to members of the trade press preparatory to the formal opening of the completed studio.

As to the American angle: They are filming a musical comedy success, "The Arcadians," which I believe had production in America. But it is its comedian who has the real American angle, for it is our own Ben Blue who has abandoned America, temporarily at least, to open a successful restaurant and Night Club in London, and from this a debut at screen star was but a step.

At the Gaumont they shortly will commence a story which promises to be something new in British production, a story entirely of London life which, it is hoped, will accomplish in our country what our pictures have done over here to make American life familiar. It is called "In Pawn" (based upon a play) and the leading lady will be Caroline Peterson, who made a decided hit over here in "Broadway." She is an American, of course, and her name is hoped also to carry weight.

"The Luck of the Navy" has Henry Victor, recently back from Hollywood, as the dashing naval officer, and Evelyn Laye one of the principal musical comedy favorites as the other lead. This is her first screen role and it may interfere with her proposed plan to come to New York this fall in the London importation, "Princess Charming."

The question of just how far typical British pictures can go in other countries is one that is interesting producers here. Many of them frankly are making simply for home consumption while others would prefer the world market. One director told me that he is trying to create a new type of pictures, another was imitating, to the best of his ability, American methods. And so it goes. One development has been the lengthening of the news reel—and not always to its advantage.

Keith Cornerstone Laid for Boston Memorial

The cornerstone of the new B. F. Keith Memorial Theatre in Boston, was laid last Thursday with fitting ceremonies provided by Mayor Malcolm B. Nichols of Boston. Vaudeville stars of the past and present and stars of the legitimate stage were present in large numbers.

Tribute was paid to the late Benjamin Franklin Keith as father of vaudeville in America, and to Edward F. Albee, for years associated with Mr. Keith and his successor as head of the vast Keith-Albee interests.

In addition to that of the Mayor, addresses were also made by Fred Stone, president of the National Vaudeville Artists Association. Mr. Albee, George M. Cohan, F. F. Proctor, Walter D. Collins, Earl L. Crabb, Joe Webber, Lew Fields, Hap Ward, Maggie Cline, McIntyre and Heath, James Thornton, Julia Arthur, Raymond Hitchcock, and Henry Chesterfield. Miss Dorothy Stone applied the steel coat of cement with a golden trowel to the cornerstone strong box.

Minneapolis Considers Big Increase In Personal Property Tax on Film

A MEASURE to increase the personal property tax on films in vaults of local exchanges to an extent estimated at ten times the present valuation basis is now under consideration by the Minneapolis city tax committee, sitting as a board of equalization.

A committee composed of Theodore L. Hays, T. A. Burke, and Eddie Ripson, representing the film companies, filed a protest against the proposed plan and the tax committee has taken the protest under advisement. It is understood that if the new plan is put through the film companies will pay the taxes under protest and then take the case into the courts to arrive at some definite and equitable basis of valuation and taxation.

A recent survey of the city's property was made with a view to uncovering taxable property and the proposed change in the tax on motion picture films is one result of the Survey. In the past the personal property tax on films has been based on estimated valuations set by assessors and exchangemen. The board of equalization would change the basis of taxation to an estimated valuation by the average earning possibility of a subject and its number of prints. The present tax rate is two and three-quarters per cent. The proposed change of valuation would increase the amount realized enormously. For example, one Minneapolis exchange was taxed last year on a basis of $10,000 valuation, while this year under the proposed plan the company would be taxed on a valuation basis of approximately $110,000.

Will Rogers Is Honored

National Press Club Makes Him "Congressman-at-Large" at Big Reception

THE National Press Club in Washington, D. C., made Will Rogers a Congressman-at-Large with a suspended salary of $1 a year at a monster reception held at the National Capital last Saturday night. The ceremony and presentation were broadcast through forty radio stations and the speeches and music were heard in all parts of the country.

Arrangements for the Rogers reception were made by Fred E. Hamlin, press representative for Sam Rork, who is producing the film version of Charles Hoyt's famous stage play, "A Texas Steer," with Rogers as the star, for release through First National.

The company arrived in Washington last week to film exteriors. With the comedian on the special train were Mr. Rork, Mrs. Rork, their daughter, Ann, who plays the role of Bossy, daughter of Congressman Maverick Brander; Richard Wallace, the director; Louise Fazenda, who plays Mrs. Brander; Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., the juvenile lead, and a company of assistants and cameramen.

The National Press Club reception for Mr. Rogers and members of the "Texas Steer" company was held at the Washington Auditorium, whose 6,000 seat capacity was entirely inadequate to hold the large number of admirers of the humorist-philosopher.

Louis Ludlow, President of the Club, presented Mr. Rogers with a parchment scroll attesting his appointment to the hitherto unknown office of "Congressman-at-Large." His duties, said Mr. Ludlow, will be to "roam over the country, pry into the state of the union, check up on prohibition enforcement and report at regular intervals to the National Press Club." Tenure of office is confined to good behavior, and the job carries a suspended salary of $1 a year.

In his response to the conferring of the title of Congressman-at-Large, Mr. Rogers said he did not consider the appointment "any honor at all;" that he had been brought up by his parents to live so that "you'll never become a Congressman," and now he felt the "shame" of it. He lamented that the office had been conferred upon him in public and not in a corner of a secluded room.

"I have been given a sheepskin," he said, "Think of giving a sheepskin to a cowboy! Over a million men in America have got a sheepskin and haven't got a sheep; and it takes eight or ten years for them to get a sheepskin and they are not taught how to get a sheep."

Sennett Comedy Girl to Play Lorelei

Paramount has announced the choice of Ruth Lee Taylor for the role of Lorelie Lee in Anita Loos' "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." Miss Taylor is a comparatively unknown Mack Sennett player and was chosen from a long list of prominent screen personalities who were under consideration. Among these are Constance Talmadge, Phyllis Haver and Laura La Plante.

Miss Taylor played leads in three Harry Langdon two-reel comedies for Sennett, and opposite Ben Turpin in others. Three months ago her contract expired and she has been out of work since.

Lya De Putti Leaves for One German Picture

Lya De Putti is off for Europe on a sixty-day leave of absence granted by American producers in order that she may star in one super-production for the German organization, Phoebus Films.

While here Miss De Putti completed "Midnight Rose" and "Buck Privates" for Universal, and still has another picture to make for that company under her contract. Since her residence in Hollywood she has been missed in Germany, where she is a prime favorite, and German producers induced her to appear in another German film. Upon completion of this picture she will return to America to complete her contract with Universal.

K. C. Patrons Vote Decisively for Features in Preference to Presentations

WITH elaborate stage presentations in theatres on all sides of him, Samuel Carver, manager of the Liberty theatre, first run house of Kansas City, made up his mind to let his audiences settle the question. That was three weeks ago. The voting by the audiences ended this week.

Mr. Carver assured his patrons, through the medium of trailers, that he would provide stage presentations and keep the admission price at its present scale, or show only first run pictures at a reduction in prices. Aside from a few small acts, the Liberty never has had stage presentations.

Out of 4,637 votes, 3,458 favored feature pictures exclusively, those desiring stage shows numbering 1,179. There were thousands of patrons, of course, who did not vote, but such a lack of interest is accepted by Mr. Carver as meaning that those patrons will "take it or leave it," regardless of what the theatre's policy might be.

W. Hammons, Educational's president, immediately started back to the coast.

Fraser Talks Production

Lloyd General Manager Says One-Man Rule Will Do Away With Many Evils

THERE is nothing radically wrong with the motion picture industry, in the opniion of William R. Fraser, general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, who is in New York with the Lloyd company, which is shooting scenes for the comedian's newest pictures. There has been more smoke than fire, according to Fraser, with all of the talk of retrenchment, salary cuts and mismanagement.

Discussing the situation he said:

"One man must be held responsible for any job. Two men dictating what should be done with that job are bound to cause confusion. If one man is not capable of making a decision that is correct he has no business at the helm. There are too many supervising directors, too many writers who think they should be directing pictures, instead of just developing plots; too many advisory supervisors, and sometimes too many of everybody.

"The progress of the industry has been so marked that the gamble has been virtually eliminated from production, particularly in the case of stars and producers who follow the mode of production pursued by Harold Lloyd.

"Today the wise producer is letting his audience dictate what should go into his pictures, as Harold Lloyd has done. Years ago he started this business of interviewing, which since has become so common in the industry. One cannot attend a neighborhood motion picture in Los Angeles now without seeing in electric lights, 'Big Feature Preview Here Tonight.' It's a healthy sign for the industry. It is the one and only certain method of determining, without guessing, the class of your product.

"There is waste in the motion picture business as there is in every other industry. The rating may be a little high in our business, but it is coming down. The average motion picture producer has but one thing in view—results. He wants good pictures, and he goes sometimes to extremes to get them, but where there is one man at the head of production who can reign absolutely and apply the proper intelligence,, there is little waste, little lost motion.

"High salaries are due those who earn them, and as long as we get pictures that bring commensurate returns at the box office. As far as the Lloyd Corporation is concerned, our policy demands a standard of excellence second to none, and we spare no means to obtain this end—money, time or anything else it might involve."

M-G-M Lion Will Make Coast to Coast Flight

LEO, full grown lion, and mascot of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Company, will be first animal and sole passenger to participate in a non-stop airplane flight from coast to coast, if present plans do not miscarry. The flight is scheduled to start probably from Culver City on September 11th, and to terminate at Roosevelt Field on Long Island within twenty-four hours.

The plane, of the same type as Lindbergh's, is nearing completion at the B. F. Mahoney Aircraft shops in San Diego. The lion will be housed in a specially built enclosed cage, constructed as part of the plane directly behind the pilot. Lee will be on a liquid diet during the trip, and will be fed and watered by means of a tubing running from the pilot's compartment to a container at the bottom of the cage. The trip is to be made only to demonstrate the practicability of carrying animals long distances by airplane.

Local Obstructions Hurt U. S. Film in Japan

F. B. O. Representative Tells of Conditions Existing in Far East

COLVIN BROWN, vice-president of F. B. O., is just in receipt of an interesting report on film conditions in Japan from William Scott, Far Eastern representative of the company. Scott reports that in addition to the usual distribution troubles there are many purely local obstructions, which make for slow progress in establishing American films.

Scott reports that few theatres in Japan have adequate seating capacity. In a theatre that caters to seven hundred patrons there are seats for about two hundred. The overflow sit or squat upon the floor.

Most of the product shown is made by Japanese companies. In the thousand theatres operating, eight hundred and forty-five use Japanese product exclusively, one hundred and twenty-five screen a mixed program of imported and domestic film, and thirty are using imported film exclusively.

The small quantity of American film being shown, according to Scott, is winning high favor and more and more the demand is increasing for American pictures. He feels that with the advent of more American theatres and American presentations suitable revenue, now lacking, will be derived from Japanese sources. The new Nogaku-Za Theatre in Tokyo is now the center of much attention. It is under American management, with a twenty-five piece orchestra and has adequate accommodations. Its success seems assured and will probably do much to popularize American films.

The Japanese censors are reported remarkably severe. Sex stories are entirely taboo and love scenes, especially kissing, as well as rioting and scenes depicting lawlessness, are also prohibited.

The Japanese public demands about the same sort of thing as its American prototype in its film fare, according to Scott. Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin are the most popular artists and any story with plenty of fast logical action is well received.

The Japanese are learning to appreciate good from bad film, according to the report, and soon they will appreciate and be willing to pay to see pictures at present too highly priced for distribution. Better facilities will also eventually bring more consideration to American films.

Sax Blames Producers for Mediocre Pictures

SAM SAX, president of Gotham Productions, blames the producers for the mediocrity in pictures, but also says the exhibitor has made the situation worse with over-stuffed presentation programs. He declares the two fundamental contributing evils are overhead and overproduction and that the second is the direct result of the first.

Discussing the situation, Mr. Sax says: "Thousands of dollars are spent on a story and then thousands more are paid to adaptors and scenarists to mince the story into hash. Meanwhile the contract players loll in their porch swings, receiving enormous salaries for idleness while the scenarist and director wrangle over the script.

"The problem of keeping the stars and directors busy is the biggest one the large producing organizations have to face. The result is that the machinery must keep turning and one factory-made picture follows another. The marvel is that at this rate so many worthy pictures see the light of day at all.

Canadian Justice Holds Pictures Moral

THE findings of Mr. Justice Boyer of Montreal, representing the Royal Commission appointed to investigate moving picture theatre conditions, were presented to the Quebec Provincial Government Tuesday in the form of a 13,000 word report. After examining 427 witnesses, Justice Boyer gave judgment that moving pictures, generally speaking, were not immoral, but he recommended that all children under 16 years of age should not attend performances.

Justice Boyer also ruled that Sunday shows should not be prohibited because they were a necessity. Sunday performances were favored by many classes of citizens, he found. Present laws and regulations governing the operation of theatres were sufficient, but he recommended the establishment of a Poster Censor Board by the Quebec Government to work with the film censors of the province, thus abolishing Civic Poster Boards.

Ten Companies Busy for Fox on West Coast

Ten companies are at work at the Fox West Coast studios in a new production drive under the direction of Sol M. Wurtzel, general superintendent. Two were completed last week and three new ones got under way.

Buck Jones finished "Blood Will Tell" on Thursday, and started work Friday on "The Branded Sombrero." "The High School Hero," featuring Sally Phipps, Nick Stuart and Charles Paddock, was also completed last week.

The two pictures that got started, in addition to "The Branded Sombreror," were "Wolf Fangs," featuring the dog, Thunder, and a six-reel comedy featuring Ted McNamara and Sammy Cohen, of "What Price Glory" renown. Lew Seiler is directing "Wolf Fangs" and Frank O'Connor is making the Cohen-McNamara story, as yet untitled.

Virtually All of Educational Units Producing

When "Big Boy" returns from a mountain resort near Los Angeles where he is recuperating from his recent serious illness, practically all of the units producing for Educational will be well along in production. The child star is expected to begin his new juvenile comedy as soon as his director, Charles Lamont, has finished a new Mermaid comedy.

Dorothy Devore is starting her third picture on a ranch in the San Fernando Valley under the direction of Norman Taurog. Glenn Cavender and Al Thompson are supporting her. Lupino Lane, assisted by Wallace Lupino, is starting his fourth comedy for the season with Mark Sandrich directing. George Davis is acting in a new Mermaid comedy. Larry Semon is well into production on "The Stunt Man." Johnny Arthur is nearing the end of his second Tuxedo comedies, and Jack Lloyd and Phil Dunham are working on a two-reel Cameo comedy. Lloyd Hamilton is resting between pictures following his "At Ease."

Jersey Asks Arbiters On N. Y. Board

AT a meeting of the directors of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey held early in the week, it was agreed that the organization will insist upon appointing its own arbitrators to sit in with the New York Film Board in judgment of cases affecting Northern Jersey. The proposition has been taken up with the Hays office and the T. O. C. C., which handled Northern Jersey cases.

Joseph M. Seider declares that if the present negotiations fail the association will resort to the law. Southern Jersey arbitration cases are handled through Philadelphia, with the state exhibitors appointing their three members.

At the directors' meeting E. T. Kelly was appointed treasurer and his post as vice-president was taken over by Louis Rosenthal, former treasurer.

N. Y. Weather Halts Lloyd in New Comedy

After ten days of enforced idleness because of unfavorable weather conditions, Harold Lloyd and the company he brought from California with him started shooting late in the week in New York on the comedian's new picture for Paramount. Previously they had devoted an afternoon to work at Coney Island, where a number of scenes were shot.

The Lloyd company went on location in the vicinity of the Women's Hospital in Harlem, and they attracted so much attention it became necessary to call out a squad of police from the 100th street station.

Next week will be a busy one for Lloyd. He will complete the taxicab episodes, working in Harlem, at St. John's Orphanage in Brooklyn and at the Yankee Stadium.

Marion and Fairbanks, Jr. in "A Texas Steer"

With the signing of George Marion for a character part and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., for the juvenile lead, the cast for Sam E. Rork's "A Texas Steer," for First National, is practically complete.

Fox or Paramount in Albany Deal

EITHER the Fox or the Paramount company is said to be behind the deal that last week took an option on Benson's Hotel in Albany, as a site for a million dollar theatre that may be erected in the near future. The option expires October 10. The property is said to be held for $175,000. It is located about two short blocks from the State Capitol and in the main business center of the city. Both of these companies were negotiating a few months ago for the huge auditorium that will be a part of the new Masonic Temple. The erection of this temple, however, has been delayed. If the new theatre is erected, it will bring real competition to the Stanley Company of America, which is now operating four houses in Albany.

Says "Local Touch" Is Aim of "U" Theatre Policy

Michalove, Outlining Operating Plan, Declares Community Pride Resents "Outside Domination"

SOME interesting observations emphasizing the value of "local touch" in chain theatre operation as opposed to "long distance" methods are set forth by Dan Michalove, general manager of Universal Chain Theatrical Enterprises, in a discussion of principles and policies which he inaugurated in the management of Universal theatres.

"The theatre is essentially a community institution," says Mr. Michalove. "The more the patrons are made to feel the theatre belongs to them and performs a definite service in their behalf, the greater their interest in the institution.

"The theatre becomes a factor in the lives of people who patronize it. Even in the major metropolitan centers the community feeling is not lost.

"In its relatively brief history the Roxy Theatre has become a recognized institution in New York. Rothafel is himself a Broadway institution.

"Hugo Riesenfeld is a favorite along the Great White Way. His success is due not only to sterling musicianship and sound showmanship, but largely to the fact that he adds to those qualifications an intimate knowledge of Broadway.

"Joe Plunkett and Carl Edouarde have made the Strand a successful Broadway institution; Major Bowes and the Capitol have written theatre history in New York.

"Sid Grauman is an established institution on the Pacific Coast.

"There is scarcely a section of the country that has not produced one pre-eminent leader in theatre enterprises.

"Citing but two instances: there is E. V. Richards, the prime power in the Saenger organization. Though his activities have been confined exclusively to the Southern states, he has become a national figure. Mr. Richards makes a fine art of his business and he applies his knowledge to the operation of the Saenger theatre enterprises.

"The other case is that of a man recruited to the Saenger organization by Mr. Richards. He is Maurice F. Barr, managing director of the Saenger theatres in New Orleans. With a background of valuable newspaper experience, excellent local contacts, and some instinctive sense of showmanship, Mr. Barr set himself to the task of making the Saenger theatres in that city an enduring success.

"Successful chain theatre operation demands for each section an expert familiar with his territory and his job. The recognition of this basic principle determined Universal's policies of operation. The plan was actually put into practice when Universal acquired its first group of theatres—the E. J. Sparks Florida circuit. A manager who knew the community was assigned to each theatre—and the entire Florida circuit was placed under the supervision of an executive with wide experience in theatre operation in that state. The same man, H. B. Vincent of Orlando, is still our district manager in Florida.

"When Universal launched a more vigorous program of theatre acquisition and expansion with a view to concentrating considerable energy in the Southern states, the man chosen to assist in developing that section was Willard C. Patterson, a native Southerner and a practical showman.

"Mr. Patterson came into the Universal organization with a long record of successful theatre operation covering enterprises in several Southern states.

"His promotion five months ago to the head of our southern division, filling the vacancy created when I gave up that post to accept the general managership of Universal theatres, was directly in line with our policy of heading each division with an expert peculiarly qualified to handle the problems of that territory.

"The same principle was applied in placing Charles G. Branham in charge of our Middle Western division. Mr. Branham is a product of the Middle West; in that territory he is on familiar ground.

"Observation has taught us that community pride resents domination by outside forces. Patrons do not relish the feeling that their entertainment fare is dictated by a distant and probably powerful corporation. They like to feel that a community institution has some authority of its own.

"Sensing this attitude on the part of the public we have precluded any suggestion of 'outside domination' by actually placing in the hands of our division managers full authority for buying and booking pictures for their circuits. The division managers take the principle still farther and confer with individual theatre managers in the matter of buying and dating attractions for their houses.

"As a result of this policy the theatre becomes a more vital community institution, harmony is maintained within the ranks, and the irksome weight of arbitrary rule is eliminated."

Paramount Showings at Midnight Permanent

PARAMOUNT has decided to have a midnight showing regularly at the Paramount Theatre in New York, as a result of the success attendant upon the recent showing of "Underworld." It is figured that the great crowds released from legitimate theatres around 11 o'clock each night will help popularize the midnight showings.

Paramount expects to build up a permanent 11:45 P. M. patronage, with the feature picture only, shown with music, but without the other long features of the program and stage presentation.

:: "The Check-Up" ::

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who consider it "Fair"; the third, the number who consider it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who consider it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

F. B. O. to Hire Players as Required

F B O's new policy, following the abolishment of the stock company of actors, will be to have only stars and a small group of players, who are being groomed for stardom, under long term contracts. All other actors used in the company pictures will be selected from the open market.

With the new system of casting planned by F B O it is figured all players who are competent and good actors will be in constant demand, and will be able to work fifty-two weeks a year without being crowded out of their places by stock company players.

At the present time F B O has under contract only three western stars, Tom Tyler, Bob Steele and Buzz Barton; Al Cooke and Kit Guard as a comedy team; Frankie Darro, child star; and three directors, Leo Meehan, Ralph Ince and Robert De Lacy. All other players and directors are hired for the picture only.

Ralph A. Kohn

Kohn Is Named Treasurer of Paramount

Ralph A. Kohn has been chosen treasurer of the Paramount-Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by the executive committee of the board of directors. Mr. Kohn has been assistant secretary-treasurer since the organization of the company. He was also made a member of the executive committee.

The new treasurer succeeds Elek John Ludvigh, at whose request he was appointed. Mr. Ludvigh has been serving as secretary-treasurer and general counsel of the company, and he asked that he be relieved of the duties as treasurer.

Except for the period he served in the war, Mr. Kohn has been continuously with the Paramount organization and at different times has been associated with nearly all phases of the company's business. He is a graduate of New York University and the University law school. In addition to being an assistant secretary-treasurer of Paramount he has been a director of the company for a number of years.

Hobby and Brown Win Exploitation Prizes

Given First and Second Awards in "Naughty But Nice" Contest Sponsored by First National and Announced Exclusively in NEWS

JACK L. HOBBY, assistant manager of the Tampa Theatre, Tampa, Fla., and Harry Brown, Jr., manager of the Majestic, Mansfield, O., respectively were awarded first and second prize in the Colleen Moore Exploitation contest for the best suggestions from exhibitors for publicizing her newest picture "Naughty But Nice" conducted by First National and announced exclusively in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Mr. Hobby won the first prize of $100, and Mr. Brown the second prize of $50.

Both prize winning suggestions were submitted in the form of exploitation campaigns executed by the managers in conjunction with presentations of "Naughty But Nice" at their theatres.

The contest was announced in the July 1st issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the competition closing on August 1st. Scores of replies were received at the offices of First National Pictures and of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Some of these were suggestions by exhibitors as to how they would exploit the picture; most were articles, illustrated with photographs, ads and other publicity aids, telling how the exhibitors had exploited the picture.

The judges of the contest were J. S. Dickerson, associate editor of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Al Rockett, Western Production Manager for First National, and C. F. Chandler, director of advertising and publicity for that company.

The campaign which the judges selected as the winner of first prize in the contest was launched one week in advance of the opening of "Naughty But Nice" at the Tampa. It was planned and executed by Mr. Hobby.

In the lobby of the theatre, a week in advance, a peep-box in the form of a small house, with long sloping roof and dormer windows, was placed on a table, with printed instructions to peep through an opened, first floor window. When patrons at the previous week's attraction peeped through this window they saw a number of small figures cut out of "Naughty But Nice" stills, with the title of the picture lettered in the background.

Another feature of Mr. Hobby's exploitation was a window display in the city's chief men's outfitting store, Maas' Haberdashery. A still showing Colleen Moore and her girl companion hiding behind the opened wardrobe trunk in the hotel room of an unknown man while the man, in B. V. D's and shirt, arranged his tie, was pasted on a bit of heavy pasteboard, cut to represent a picture frame. The man's socks were held up by Paris garters and the sign tieing the picture up with the window display read: "At least he's wearing Paris garters," with an arrow leading from the sign to the still. The bottom part of the special sign carried the name of the star, title of the picture, name of theatre and the playdate. Underneath it was a display of Paris garters for men.

Trousers, a cane and straw hats occupied the rest of the display window.

A third feature of Mr. Hobby's campaign was an attractive windshield sticker for motorists. This carried merely the title of the picture and became much in demand. This stunt was started a week in advance.

Brown's Campaign

The main feature of Harry Brown's campaign at the Majestic Theatre, Mansfield, O., which won the second prize of $50, was a "Naughty But Nice" dance at the big Coliseum dance hall in Mansfield. The contest was for three days, the prize a pair of Colleen Moore dance slippers contributed by the Kinney Shoe Store. Mr. Brown arranged and handled the contest and estimates that he thus "sold" the show to 4,000 persons. The manager of the dance hall paid for all of his own advertising, including the dance program.

The program was headed by the word "Dance," with "Be naughty but nice" underneath it. Clear across the bottom of the two pages devoted to listing the dances was the injunction, "See 'Naughty But Nice' with Colleen Moore—Majestic Theatre—Sunday."

Half of the reverse side of the program was devoted to a large portrait of Miss Moore, while the remaining half carried the theatre's advertisement.

At the dance contest, on Saturday night, Mr. Brown gave out fifty autographed portraits of Miss Moore to the first fifty girls entering the finals.

A display of ladies' slippers was given in its principal show window by the Kinney Shoe Store, with a pair of slippers presented by Miss Moore occupying the place of honor. A special card called attention to the slippers and to the "Naughty But Nice" dance at the Coliseum.

Another window display was in Askin's store. It consisted of ladies' dresses and underwear.

Mr. Brown also attracted much attention to the picture through 3-column, page-deep ads in the Mansfield dailies. "My Wife Wants a New Dress," was the heading of the ads, with each word occupying a line, in heavy black type. A paragraph of the text following was devoted to Mr. Brown's own impression of "Naughty But Nice" after seeing it run off.

Youngsters Guests at Show of First Serial Chapter

Directly in the center of the front page of The Evening Reporter-Star of Orlando, Fla., was a story recently inviting the children of Orlando to be the guests of the paper at a showing of the first chapter of "Whispering Smith Rides," at the Rialto theatre. This came about through an arrangement of Manager Sol Samuels.

The story told the children to gather at the newspaper office between 10 and 10:30 on Tuesday morning and that from there they would march to the Rialto headed by the Newsboys Band. Just when the street was crowded to its last inch, despite a merciless sun, a truck arrived from the theatre bringing banners for the children to carry in the parade. The truck also bore two mounted 6-sheets and preceded the procession down the street.

Key City Reports

New York City

IN its third and final week at the Roxy "What Price Glory" has easily made box office history, having grossed during its first fortnight, $282,161.60 with 343,031 attendance. From Saturday, Aug. 27, to Tuesday, Aug. 30, inclusive, this picture has grossed $82,370.95 with an attendance of 90,787, and it will easily make the $130,000 mark at the end of this week. The best previous week the Roxy ever had was $129,000. Undoubtedly "Glory" could be held another week but other exhibitors are clamoring for it.

"Underworld," at the Paramount, practically equalled that house's record, going over the $80,000 mark, and furthermore having the distinction of graduating to the Rivoli for an extended run. It will no doubt be there for some time, for even the morning shows are packing them in.

Lon Chaney fans in New York City continued to pay tribute to "Mockery's" second week and, despite some adverse criticism, it drew a gratifying attendance, due no doubt to Chaney's popularity. "Ben Hur" follows in.

"Wings" is going great guns at the Criterion, and the house has been sold out for several weeks in advance; and the same can be said for "The Patent Leather Kid," which grossed $42,463.50 in thirteen days at the Globe. As the Globe seats but 1,300, this means that the house has been sold out at every performance. First National has extended its lease on the Globe to Jan. 1.

"Hard Boiled Haggerty" drew good business for the Strand and the results indicate a well to average box office return. There can be no doubt that "Seventh Heaven" would be pulling better were the Harris Theatre in a better location. The real figures will show when it goes into the Roxy. "Old San Francisco" still stays at Warners, and is managing to do very well.

That Victor Hugo's book "Les Miserables," done into picture form by Universal, has been widely read is evidenced in the way this picture is pulling at the Central. Trade comment has carried a doubtful tone, but figures do not lie. Wise ones say it's the book that's doing it. "The King of Kings" continues to do nicely; likewise "The Way of All Flesh."

Chicago

CHICAGO motion picture theatre operators were pleased this week to know that the usual fall revival of business, aided by an early cool spell, was arriving ahead of schedule, and throughout the city a healthy increase in attendance was noted.

At the Chicago "The Stolen Bride" on the screen and two stage shows, "Spitalny's Moonlight Sonata," and "Kid Days" played to big business throughout the week. The popular Oriental also had an excellent week with "The Heart of Maryland" featuring Dolores Costello on the screen, and Paul Ash's "Hey, Rube" on the stage. At the Roosevelt, the Dempsey and Sharkey fight pictures were in their last week, and continued to draw well, aided by the timely arrival of Jack Dempsey in Chicago, and the awakening local interest in the coming fight. "For the Love of Mike" was the other feature on the bill. "The Big Parade" went into its fifth week at McVickers Theatre, and box office statements reflected the continued popularity of this big feature.

At the Uptown, Lon Chaney in "The Unknown" was the feature picture, and Frankie Masters and his band made their first appearance at this house in "Sheiks of Jazzoby," and business was good. At the Sheridan, Verne Buck and his orchestra on the stage with "The Gingham Girl" on the screen, shared in the general revival of business. "Paid to Love" with Charles Kaley and his band reinforced by George Givot, Vitaphone and other features, brought good crowds to the Granada.

At the Capitol "Resurrection" on the screen, Del Delbridge in "Rushin' Jazz," and other stage attractions, provided a strong drawing bill.

Benny Meroff and his band headed the Marbro stage show, and "Paid to Love" was the screen feature, with Vitaphone as an extra attraction, business being better than average.

Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS exhibitors had good reason to rejoice last week, for the turn stiles were clicking more swiftly than they have done for many a day. There were a number of reasons for this, chief among them Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, who dropped into the Twin Cities for two days. Then again, Minneapolis was the scene of the national amateur golf tournament.

The State theatre in Minneapolis tied up with Lindy's visit in fine fashion. They staged a "Hello Lindy" revue, a breezy, high-flying stage show, and advertised it heavily. As a result the State scored heavily in all the Lindbergh publicity. Included on the State program was Billie Dove in "The Stolen Bride" and the Howard Brothers on the Vitaphone.

Norma Talmadge in "Camille" pulled heavily at the Strand. This picture did such a big business that it was necessary to hold it over for a second week, the first time that that theatre had held over a film for many weeks.

The Lyric also experienced a fine week with Esther Ralston in "Ten Modern Commandments" and the Dempsey-Sharkey films were transferred from the Lyric to the Grand, where they continued to draw big crowds.

Pantages did a whale of a business with "What Price Glory," and the crowds rushed the boxoffice so intensely that the film had to be held over for a second week.

The Hennepin-Orpheum shared in the general theatre prosperity of the week, with "Rich Men's Sons" supplementing the regular vaudeville program. The chief neigborhood houses—Lagoon, Rialto, Loring and Lyndale—found business booming. Their pictures included "Rough House Rosie," "The Better' Ole," and "Slide Kelly, Slide."

Atlanta

ATLANTA theatres enjoyed a good week on the whole.

Emil Jannings in "The Way of All Flesh," playing at the Howard, was the outstanding picture of the week, receiving unanimous praise from local critics and theatre patrons seeing it. However, as seems to be the fate of many great artistic productions, its box-office reached only an average peak.

"Back to God's Country," featuring Renee Adoree, Robert Frazer, and Walter Long, proved the prize box-office ringer. This picture, combined with an extraordinarily good Pantages vaudeville bill, broke all records for the Capitol Theatre since its opening the latter part of June.

Keith's Georgia had a good week with Charles Sidney and Carlie Murray in their comedy, "Lost at the Front." Keith's Georgia also showed Redfern's take-off.

Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle in "Adam and Evil," drew a heavy box-office for Loew's Grand. This clever comedy brought commendation from all.

The Metropolitan Theatre enjoyed an unusually good week playing "Dance Magic" with Ben Lyon and Pauline Starke.

Zane Grey's "Nevada," featuring Gary Cooper and Thelma Todd, brought good business to the Rialto.

The Tudor divides honors for an average week between "Hard Fists," "California or Bust," and "Terror of Bar X."

"Married Alive," "Tongues of Scandal," and "The Big Stunt" were good drawing cards for the New Alamo.

Milwaukee

BUSINESS this week has been excellent say managers of Milwaukee theatres. In fact, receipts show a decided gain over previous weeks of this month and a decided increase over business at this time last year—due no doubt to the decidedly cool weather Milwaukee has been having recently. "Moon of Israel" shown last week at the Garden was a strong attraction and kept the house well filled at every performance. "After Midnight," the feature at the Wisconsin drew excellent crowds. "The Lone Eagle" together with "Jelly Roll Morton" comprised the Alhambra bill for the week, and made a strong bid for popularity in the week's offerings. "Service for Ladies" drew good business to the Merrill. Harry Langdon in "Long Pants" found appreciative audiences at the Strand.

Neighborhood theatres experienced the same good business that down town theatres enjoyed. Some managers found that totals for the week were unusually high. Good programs together with the tang of autumn in the air is accountable. "The Red Mill" at the Milwaukee was exceedingly well attended. "Framed" found favor at the Oriental, and "The Unknown" was featured at the Modjeska and Tower where it played to large houses. The Colonial offered "Lovers?" and found business good "The Better 'Ole" was well received at the Venetian.

Seattle

CHALK up another banner week for the Fifth Avenue Theatre—in spite of heat and .conflicting .outdoor .entertainments this house established a three-day running box office record and finished the remainder of the week very little behind the house gross record set a few weeks ago. "The Stolen Bride" was the film attraction, and a very satisfactory one. But Fanchon-Marco's "Tassels Idea" on the stage set the whole city talking—a magnificent dance act composed of six teams of adagio dancers who were little short of sensational. Eddie Peabody as master of ceremonies, of course, still continues to be a box office magnet also. The week totaled more than $20,000.

Second money probably went to the Coliseum Theatre with "Framed," although the picture received very detrimental audience comments and business dropped off toward the end of the week. Also well up in the running was Manager Bender's Columbia Theatre show featuring "Back to God's Country" and the personal appearance of a nationally-known trained police dog owned by Seattle residents. This program did a very pleasing gross for the entire week.

At the Blue Mouse Theatre, the second week of "Heart of Maryland" and a mediocre Vitaphone program showed a tendency to drop off. This and other recent program attractions have been very poor box office bets.

"The Covered Wagon" played its second week at the United Artists Theatre to fair business. At the Pantages, "Passion" was brought back for a reissue engagement, but was only a slight drawing card at the box office.

The Dempsey-Sharkey fight pictures at the Winter Garden Theatre continued to do business for Universal, and Manager Felker held them over for a second week that was quite profitable. "Tip Toes" at the Embassy held its own against the various competitive films, but was not a strong picture.

Boston

STEADILY increasing business is reported from both down town and suburban theatres for the week. During the coming two weeks some of the new theatres in the suburbs will be opened, giving additional seating capacity but exhibitors feel confident that the number of new seats provided will not interfere with attendances at already operating theatres.

New England, and especially in the vicinity of Boston, has not for many years known so cool or so rainy a summer, which may have been one reason why Boston theatres have grossed so well this season.

Metropolitan's feature is "Service for Ladies" which is receiving the same favorable comment that has marked the showing of the features for several weeks. Their stage number, is Banjomania.

Loew's State's offering is "After Midnight," which has also been well received and won much praise from the reviewers locally. The presentation is new this week and consists of Isham Jones and his Orchestra assisted by a couple of specialty numbers.

Loew's Orpheum has been a mecca for the youngsters, and a large number of the grown-ups, too, with the showing of "The Bugle Call" for this week feature. Heavy business is reported.

"Hard Boiled Haggerty" heads the bills at the two Olympias, the Washington street and the Scollay square, and has proven one of the best drawing cards either house has shown for some weeks.

At the Twin houses, Modern and Beacon, "The Missing Link" and "Good as Gold" provided the double feataure bills, playing to well above average houses.

"His First Flame" is featured at the Keith-Albee Boston with "Alaskan Adventures" as an extra for the week, reports indicating the largest business of the summer season for the house.

"The Better 'Ole" continues to draw attention with its showing at the Capitol. "Ten Modern Commandments" has proven an unexpected drawing card at the Exeter during the week, apparently improving with age. "Dream Street" and "The Savage" at the Lancaster, "The Brute" and "Shamrock and the Rose" at the University, and "Metropolis" at the Fenway have grossed exceedingly well.

Albany

LAST week in Albany was the sort of a week that had Tony Veiller, manager of the Mark Ritz on the jump every night attempting to handle the people that flocked to "Broadway Nights."

At the Mark Strand, "Children of Divorce" went over with a bang, although it did not establish any house record for this time of the year. The Mark Strand continues to cut its newsreels, however, much to the dissatisfaction of many patrons. The Vitaphone was but fair.

At the Leland, business was of the sort that wreathed in smiles the face of Alec Sayles, the manager, who used "The City" for the week.

At the State in Schenectady business was good with "Stolen Brides," while "The Last Laugh" and "The Secret Studio" grossed more money last week at the Strand in Schenectady than pictures shown in some little time past. In Troy, "Children of Divorce" played to satisfactory business throughout the week. Cool weather prevailed.

Tampa

THIS week opened up with a bang and theatres generally enjoyed one of the largest Sundays of the summer. The Tampa had Lon Chaney, who has a real following here and is sure fire, in "Mockery." The matinee was very good and they turned 'em away at the evening performances. The following three days were very good also. "The Poor Nut" proved a good card and drew well for the last half.

Manager Peck, of the Strand, used extra space and featured his entire week's program in his Sunday advertising, and he had a line-up that warranted it. "Backstage" opened Sunday to big business with a very good Monday following. "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary" proved an excellent puller and drew very good for the three days' showing. "Barbed Wire" closed the week and all the Pola Negri fans turned out, giving the house a dandy week.

"Hero on Horseback" opened the week for the Franklin and did well. "For Ladies Only" was given a nifty lobby flash that caught the eye of the passer and it drew good. "Splitting the Breeze" closed the week and drew the average Friday and Saturday business.

New Orleans

THE New Saenger theatre outdistanced all competition last week, playing to packed houses with "The Callahans and Murphys," coupled with the new idea Publix Stage shows, with Ralph Pollock and his seventeen merrymakers. The writer believes it was the stage bill and not the picture responsible for the big business.

But the Saenger was not the only playhouse doing an excellent business. Directly across the street Loew's State packed them in also, with "Running Wild." Energetic exploitation, well directed, and a fine vaudeville bill helped matters.

"Metropolis," the German film, drew a large patronage, at the Saenger Strand. The picture was held over a second week. "Barbed Wire" was the Globe attraction and the house did a fairly good business. Pola Negri's popularity in this city was partly responsible. "The Red Kimono," after playing at the Tudor Theatre for several weeks, was shifted to the Trianon and is still drawing theatre-goers. "Mother," with Belle Bennett, was the Tudor Theatre attraction and this theatre, too, was doing an above the average business.

Tom McCoy in "California," was the attraction at the Crescent theatre, but the picture was not the only attraction, as a musical comedy show is offered in conjunction with the film weekly. The house did a good business.

"Cabaret," at the Lyceum, had its first run elsewhere, but Gilda Gray was enough to draw theatre-goers to the house. The Orpheum offered "His Dog," with Joseph Schildkraut, but it was not the film that packed this playhouse all week. Gene Austen, Victor artist in person, did the trick. The Orpheum's business was far above average.

The neighborhood houses all played excellent attractions and the managers report business as being better than usual.

Central Pennsylvania

IN its second week's run at the Colonial, Harrisburg, "What Price Glory" continued to draw crowds whicl. sometimes called for the S. R. O. sign, though attendance did not equal that of its appearance there in the preceding week when all records were broken for a single week's attendance at any film show in Pennsylvania's Capital City.

The weather most of the week, though unseasonably cool for August, was fair and almost bracing and this fact contributed considerably to the business of all the picture houses. "Metropolis" brought excellent business to the Victoria, the intense world-wide interest in aviation and other modern trends having a lot to do with the popular interest in this film.

Norma Shearer is one of the idols of Harrisburg movie patrons and it was not surprising that she brought big profits to Loew's Regent where she appeared in "After Midnight" which held up well all week. The screen feature at the State the last half of the week was "The Heart of Maryland," starring Dolores Costello. The presence of Eddy Foy, in person, on the vaudeville half of the bill at the State materially stimulated the interest.

The Grand successfully offered "Exquisite Sinner," with Conrad Nagle and Renee Adoree, while the Capital thrilled 'em with "Hair Trigger Baxter."

Detroit

DETROIT first-run houses experienced a good week due to cool weather and few counter attractions. The regular legitimate season has not begun here, and slight opposition was offered by Miller Brothers' 101 Ranch and "Broadway," which is nearing the end of its run here.

The Temple, having recently inaugurated a picture program in conjunction with Keith vaudeville, offered "Rich Men's Sons," featuring Shirley Mason and Ralph Graves, to evening throngs. Afternoon business was good also.

At the Michigan, business was ordinary on "After Midnight" and a stage show titled "Gypsy Romance." However, the Kunsky management was very pleased with Lon Chaney's "Mockery," showing in the Capitol. The latter house did extremely well.

John Barrymore and Dolores Costello drew big crowds to the Adams. Their feature, "When a Man Loves," playing here three weeks, was the most talked-of attraction in town.

"The Cat and the Canary," mystery-melodrama, with Laura La Plante, was billed for a third week at the Madison, and fair results obtained. It is being replaced by "The Magic Flame."

The State's initial Loew vaudeville program and "Silk Stockings" did the heaviest business of all. Matinee attendance was exceedingly large during the week.

The Miles bill offered Monte Banks in "Horseshoes" and vaudeville for good business, and "Wild Beauty," augmented by a stage show, went over nicely at the Colonial.

Des Moines

THE Capitol showed "After Midnight," which was considered a good film but not entirely responsible for the box office success as the stage show is the main attraction at this theatre. At the DesMoines the feature was "The Magic Flame," which did a very nice business. Good entertainment value. Jackie Coogan's picture "The Bugle Call," was shown at the Strand for the first half of the week and did a good business, drawing a large kid trade. The last half of the week the feature was "For the Love of Mike," a comedy which gives Ben Lyon a chance to make quite a hit.

San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO motion picture theatres continued to draw crowds last week as they have been doing recently, especially in the down town theatres of the West Coast Theatres, Incorporated. "The Way of All Flesh," crowded the St. Francis Theatre for a sixth week and all, both management and the public were surprised that such big crowds would hold to the last.

"The Big Parade," shown at the California Theatre, was expected to fill the house also the second week, but the crowds were so big that at times the management was forced to turn some away. Even though the management has advertised "Ben Hur" to show the following week at the California Theatre, because of the enormous crowds coming to see "The Big Parade," they will hold it over a third week.

"Rolled Stockings," a Langdon comedy, together with the Fanchon and Marco act, "Saturday Afternoon," more than filled the Granada Theatre and the same can be said of Loew's Warfield Theatre. The latter had "The Stolen Bride," as the feature attraction and the stage act, "Masks." Frank A. Lacey, manager of the Cameo Theatre, surprised the local movie world with the 16,000 he got to crowd the Cameo the first six days while showing the Universal official fight film of the "Dempsey-Sharkey Fight." He will hold this over a second week. The Pompeii, Rivoli and a residential, the Wigwam also showed fight pictures, but Lacey did the best, although the Wigwam did especially well because of the showing of "The Wrong Mr. Wright" and the musical comedy, "Who's Booze?"

The Union Square Theatre was crowded all week with the showing of "Fighting Hombre," a comedy, "Hoot Mon" and five acts of vaudeville. The Golden Gate Theatre also was crowded with the showing of Johnny Hines in "White Pants Willie" and six acts of vaudeville, besides Pathe news and Pathe fillers.

Ernst Lubitsch's film production, "Passion" alone crowded the Pantages Theatre, the acts of vaudeville, of course, greatly helping.

St. Louis

LILLIAN GISH and Norman Kerry in "Annie Laurie" enjoyed a very good week at the Loew's State Theatre. The feature film was supported by the Royal Scotch Highlanders' band, directed by Roy D. Smith.

Over at the Ambassador Clara Bow in "Hula" added to her past laurels, and the box office didn't suffer any by it. Weather conditions were such that visions of Hawaii and its lithesome ladies were very desirable.

Out on Grand Boulevard at the Missouri Reginald Denny had a "Fast and Furious" time stretching a very speedy little picture into one of feature length. A few reels were consumed with an automobile race. Aided by a good band show on the stage the picture played to nice business.

The St. Louis Theatre at Grand and Morgan streets offered one of the best pictures of the year, if comments of cash patrons are worth anything. It was styled "The Country Doctor." Receipts for the week were good, and they deserved to be.

Neighborhood theatres continued to draw slim crowds. The weather was entirely too cool to make outdoor shows enjoyable.

Cleveland

THE picture business was brisk all last week at the first-run theatres. Cool, clear weather contributed to the situation. The Stillman did exceptionally well with the second run of "Ben Hur" at popular prices. The picture is being held a third week. "Old San Francisco" held up well during its second week at the Cameo. "The Country Doctor" packed Keith's Palace at every performance. "Mockery" did very well at the Allen. "We're All Gamblers," played to better than average business. The Park played a very successful return engagement of "Twelve Miles Out." "The Wrong Mr. Wright," combined with an act of taking motion pictures on the stage, made a record week at Reade's Hippodrome the first half of the week. Hoot Gibson in "The Silent Rider" was equally successful the last half of the week. "The Wrong Mr. Wright" went over with average results at Keith's East 105th St. house where it played all week. This was the last week of revivals at the Circle. The regular season policy followed.

Baltimore

"OLD IRONSIDES," was given its first run here at Ford's Theatre, a legitimate house with a $1.50 top admission price at nights and $1.00 top for matinees.

The picture did not prove a sensational hit with audiences, although the comedy element was enjoyed. The matinees were good, but the night business was off considerably, and business for the entire week might be considered fair.

However, business done at Loew's Century for the week beginning Monday, August 22, with "After Midnight," featuring Norma Shearer, was excellent, with Minnevitch's Harmonica orchestra and selections from "Faust" on the same program.

During its second week at Loew's Valencia, "Annie Laurie" went over very good, and "The Missing Link," with Syd Chaplin in the starring role, with Vitaphone accompaniment and extra presentations also on the program, clicked heavily at Warners' Metropolitan, causing it to be held for a second week.

"Alias the Deacon," featuring Jean Hersholt, went over right well at the New Theatre, although business was nothing to rave about, but "Poor Girls" with five acts of family vaudeville, at Keith's Hippodrome, went over very good.

The business done at Whitehurst's Garden could be considered about fair, for, on Monday, Tuesday and Saturday, there was an excellent showing, but the other days were off. "Not For Publication" with Ralph Ince, was the feature attraction with five acts of family vaudeville.

"White Pants Willie," with Johnny Hines, went over at the Rivoli with a business that was considered less than fair.

Kansas City

EARLY fall weather served as a boost for attendance in most first run theatres in Kansas City this week.

At the Newman Lon Chaney in "Mockery" played to good crowds all week, as did Tom Mix in "The Circus Ace" at the Pantages. At the Royal "The Rough Riders," which had had a previous showing, free of charge, to 60,000 persons in the Kansas City baseball park, under the auspices of the Kansas City Star, played to large audiences both afternoon and night. Sally O'Neil and Roy D'Arcy in "Frisco Sally Levy" at the Liberty had the usual Irish-Hebrew appeal and the attendance held up well all week.

Syd Chaplin in "The Missing Link," augmented by the second week's showing of the Tunney-Sharkey fight pictures, did a big business, as did Dolores Costello in "The Heart of Maryland" at the Mainstreet.

Oklahoma City

"THE WAY OF ALL FLESH" played all week at the Criterion Theatre to appreciative audiences. There was a midnight preview of this picture a week before it ran here, which roused an interest in it before it appeared. There was also a little extra newspaper space used the week before announcing it.

"The Blood Ship" had a very successful run at the Liberty Theatre and remained all week. This theatre usually changes programs in midweek. Nothing spectacular in the way of exploitation was noticed on the picture, however.

"Traveling at Home"
(Educational—One Reel)

WHY go outside of your own country in order to see interesting folks and places is the question asked in this release of the Futter Curiosities series. In these forty-eight states are plenty of things to look at or into. This collection of sights just skims over the surface, so to speak. New York is represented by one sight—that of a house (probably in the Washington Heights district) which is partially built on steel stilts and which overhangs a cliff. A giant, eight feet tall and proportionately broad, is shown along with scenes which include California's Salton sea; a man who has traveled 500 miles in thirty days in a wheel chair; a sky-scraper garage; the transfer of mail to ships on the Detroit River; a bicyclist riding atop a tall building; the busy American beaver and a pumpkin harvest. There have been better Curiosities subjects in the past, but this one ought to suffice for ten minutes or so of entertainment.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Poor Fish"—"The Ebbing Tide"
(Educational—One Reel)

AN unusually good subject. The salty tang of the sea and the crisp, strong ocean wind are brought to mind in the two scenes unfolded here: the fall salmon run at the mouth of the Columbia River and the ebbing Pacific tides going out to meet the setting sun. Educational and instructive to the extreme this little number is heartily recommended and if it were in our power to reward it with something more worthwhile than a few words that are at the best but general vaporizings we would unhesitatingly do so.

Placing his camera on a spot on the Pacific Coast and facing towards the sea, Bruce has achieved some wonderful effects. He has caught the strange, eerie light which covers the ocean after the sun has gone down and the approaching vanguard of darkness is conquering the sky. The waves come slowly in splashing snow white spray against dark, jaggered rocks silhouetted against the sky. The scene is one of poetry in motion, of vague, indefinite things caught by the magic emulsioned film. Words can give but a hazy idea of the pictorial value of this peaceful scene, every particle of which is steeped in beauty. We can only tell you that it is worth seeing, not once but many times.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Plumb Dumb"
(Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THAT clever circus rider and musical comedy star, "Poodles" Hanneford, is successfully crashing the gates of filmdom; his latest Mermaid comedy, the second of a series that he is making for Educational, has a more than ordinary number of laughs stretched throughout its length. When you have a "dumb" sort of helper parading around a blacksmith shop with forges, bellows, red hot irons and the like, and when this particular assistant has a tendency to get into trouble, all the director has to do is to stir up the situation a bit and something funny is bound to emerge from under cover.

Julius (that's "Poodles'" name) has to take his boss' place when that husky becomes suddenly ill upon meeting Saughter-House Slattery (Bull Montana) whom he is to fight in the roped arena. The Slaughter-House is a tough baby, and Julius an innocent lamb, and it really looks as if Julius is in for a beating; but nay, not so: The crafty Julius resorts to strategy to lick his tough opponent—and lick him he does, knocking him clear through the roof with a mighty wham of a fist that is encased in cement.

As we said before "Poodles" is good. He receives excellent support from Bull Montana and Blanche Payson. The hardworking village blacksmith is Glen Cavender and Lucille Hutton is the girl that inspires "Poodles" to win his fight. Al Thompson has the role of her father, Norman Taurog directed competently, as usual.

"Felix the Cat in Jack From All Trades"
(Educational—One Reel)

PAT SULLIVAN'S cat has his troubles, too. What could be more exasperating to a husband than to be constantly reminded by his wife that he is the bread-winner and that he must relinquish his afternoon naps and get busy at some job or other? It is one of Felix's pleasures to stretch his frame in the warm rays of the sun and woo Sleep, but his wife (a beautiful white cartoon cat) regards her spouse as a lazy loafer and sharp and biting are her words and clamorous her tongue when she arouses Felix with threatening gestures urging him to work and provide her with cash.

Despondently, the cat starts off on the pursuit of elusive coin and his outlook, for a time, looks as black as his skin. An active mind, though, can find many ways to procure employment—so Felix is not long idle. There could not be a better illustration of his practical mindedness than the incident where a saxophonist has put all his wind, his heart and soul into his instrument to beguile the ears of a residential neighborhood. Receiving no response to his valiant efforts, he sets himself wearily and sadly down to meditate upon his wasted efforts. Felix comes along at this time and putting other powers to work for him with the rsult that a golden harvest is received into the hat that Felix holds forth in anticipation.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Roaming the Emerald Isle"
(Pathe—One Reel)

WILL ROGERS is an eminently capable guide in this series of scenics which carries the audience to various points of interest about Europe and the Continent. The titles are Rogers' own and he has picked out some beautiful and interesting spots to make a pleasing and instructive series.

Among the sights included in the Roaming of the Emerald Isle is the home of the late Richard Croker, Old Tammany boss. And in his sub-title Rogers refers to Croker as "the one who made two votes count where one was cast." The Lakes of Killarney and other beautiful spots are depicted and they are all set in Rogers' gems of humor in the way of subtitles. It is a series that should go well anywhere.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Memories"
(Tiffany—950 Feet)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS little Tiffany gem is described as a color classic and it is all of that. It is entirely pleasing from start to finish and, done in color, it is particularly effective. There is nothing new to the story idea. It is the old tale of the elderly couple lost in reminiscences with their dream through their early life being unfolded on the screen.

Lending particular effectiveness to the splendid photography is the musical arrangement with such popular airs as "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" and "School Days," carrying completely the theme of the picture.

The old couple are shown as boy and girl lovers in their school days; there is the old school house, and the boys are seen cavorting down in the old swimming hole, sans clothing, which is stolen by the girls. The young man and womanhood is depicted pleasingly; in fact, the whole story is unfolded in a manner calculated to win the approval of any audience.

The photography is exceptionally good and the colors so blended as to make the whole thing a photographic gem. The shots are well chosen and the action could hardly be improved upon. It is one of those pictures that will send the whole family away with a pleasant taste in their mouth.

"Capers of a Camera"
(Educational—One Reel)
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE camera went a voyaging again. Manned by capable photography and the high-grade editing of Robert E. Gillaum and the clever animation of Archie N. Griffith the "one eyed demon" had quite an interesting trip and many details to tell us. At times it felt very serious and then again frivolous and playful Japan's sacred shrine at Kyoto first started the ball of conversation rolling. Then the camera hurried on apace and showed us city traffic scenes that were evidently reflected from curved mirrors. In contrast to this were the scenes of slow moving cattle and people that loll along the streets of Madrid. Germany's canals and mammoth statuary were next shown and then on to the Galata Bridge of Constantinople where the inhabitants' activities were speeded up a bit. The camera then played some prankish tricks with the movement of a group of acrobats and then took a ride down the "shoot the chutes" at Luna. After surveying an inviting fishing spot in Pennsylvania, the camera decided to sign off. We can say his listeners (or his witnesses) had a pretty enjoyable time during his conversation. In other words we place our okay upon this Hodge-Podge.

"Buster Come On"
(Universal Stern Bros.—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

THIS dog Tige certainly ought to get the most loving kind of care, for, believe us or not, some of the Buster Brown two reel comedies would not be comedies if Tige were not in them. In this one, as in others we've seen he contributes most of the fun and there can be no question but that he is one of the best trained canines of the screen. There, Tige! Here's hoping that this will bring you an extra ration of dog biscuit.

In this one the whole Brown family with the exception of Tige make ready for a vacation. This time, for the sake of a little peace, the dog is left behind. However, Tige outwits them all and arrives promptly at the Summer camp with the rest. Some exciting adventures with bulls, bees, wood pussy cats and other nice pets befall Buster, Mary Jane and Tige during their stay.

"Sodas and Shebas"
(Universal-Snappy—One Reel)

THIS single reel comedy starring Arthur Lake looks to be something new among Universal's short subjects and while it may satisfy some, to us it all seemed rather an inane effort to produce laughs. Some parts of it, however, are amusing. Arthur, a drug store cowboy, takes a temporary job as a soda-jerkr, in spite of the fact that his father disapproves and that his little sister threatens to tell "paw." But anyway, it furthers his love affair with Mary Marsh and the pair finally land in her father's dental office to gain consent. This is not accomplished without some pulling of teeth and resistance from a rival suitor.—E. G. JOHNSTON.

Hard-Boiled Haggerty

Flavored With War—Sills' Best in Long Time

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE strong and silent character which has been Milton Sills' screen spinach is probably on a temporary leave of absence. In his new picture the star plays one of those up-and-at-'em heroes whose Irish nature thrusts him into all sorts of adventure, combative, romantic et al. It is an obvious type of story—one which releases some further highlights of the late war (truly the martial fever continues unabated in Hollywood). Fortunately it has been made into a character study of a hard-boiled aviator who has the bulge on his immediate superiors. He is never reprimanded for taking A. W. O. L. That's how good he is in bringing down Heine's plane.

The aviator takes his French leave and finds romantic adventures in Paris. The action reveals melodramatic incident and much which can be labeled farcical. Ever since it became quite fashionable to humorize the war the producers are presenting in much the manner of a three-ring circus. There's a doughboy clown, acted with breezy abandon by Arthur Stone. It's a role similar to one he portrays in "The Patent Leather Kid."

While the picture doesn't reveal any new treatment or presentation of story it succeeds in being the best assignment given Milton Sills in a long, long time.

The Cast: Milton Sills, Molly O'Day, Arthur Stone, Mitchell Lewis, George Fawcett, Yola d'Avril. Director, Charles Brabin.

THEME: Comedy-drama of aviator who is a fighting demon in the sky. Has adventures and romance while taking A.W.O.L.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The atmosphere. The spirited acting by star, Molly O'Day and Arthur Stone. Molly's "tough" scenes. The comedy relief.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tie up with aviation interests. Bill as comedy-drama of the late war. Play up Molly O'Day, a new find. Tease the title and tie up with Legion posts.

DRAWING POWER: Should attract average movie crowd. O. K. for all houses.

Produced and distributed by First National. Length, six reels. Released, August, 1927.

The Bush Leaguer

Fairly Entertaining Baseball Yarn

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

MONTE BLUE is seen to fairly good advantage in this comedy drama of the small town garage owner and bush league baseball pitcher who jumps into the coast league and wins the pennant for his club. The story is one of the more or less cut and dried variety, but it is nevertheless entertaining, with a climax that brings an abundance of suspense and a satisfactory conclusion, with some fair comedy mixed in here and there.

There are crooked gamblers who endeavor to get Monte to throw the decisive game with offers of enough funds to promote the invention he is banking on for his fortune. There is reason to believe as, the story progresses, that Monte may fall for these overtures. At least the girl of his choice has reason to believe that he is not on the square. But he turns up in time to win the decisive ball game, to throw down the gambler.

The Cast: Monte Blue, Clyde Cook, Leila Hyams, William Demarest, Richard Tucker, Bud Marshall, Tom Dempsey, Wilfred North, William Wilson, Violet Palmer, Rodney Hildebrand.

THEME: Comedy drama of young garage owner and bush leaguer who wins place with coast league club, pitches his club to a pennant under adverse conditions, overthrows the crooked gamblers and wins the girl of his choice.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The baseball sequences showing shots of league games; the fight between Monte and the gambler; the shots in the training camp and the generally good work of the entire cast.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: The picture lends itself naturally to exploitation with the baseball season coming to a close and the world's series in the immediate offing; Monte's wallop of Babe Ruth proportions, which wins the game in the ninth inning.

DRAWING POWER: Has a popular appeal and should go well in any but the largest houses.

Produced and Distributed by Warner Bros. Length, 6,281 feet. Released August 20, 1927.

Underworld

Graphic Melodrama, Raw But Real

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A CRISP, uncompromising melodrama is flashed for once on the screen. Carrying the cryptic title of "Underworld" it reveals a graphic layout of crime—crime which as it develops exacts the supreme penalty. Here is celluloid matter which presents life in the raw. If there is any gesture toward the conventions it can be discovered in the portrayal of the girl crook—who is painted in too picturey a manner to be real. The interpretation of Evelyn Brent's is one that is wrought from imagination and feeling. So it isn't her fault if the figure becomes a trifle Pollyannish.

Ben Hecht's story pulsates with very moving drama, particularly when the gun fight is staged between the gangsters and the police. It projects all the earmarks of a turbulent tale, picturized on the front page of a tabloid. There is a moral behind it too—one which proves that the crook can't win. The treatment is excellent except for the sequence of the chief gangster's escape from prison—an hour before his execution. The scene glosses over what anyone would accept as very important detail. In other words how he wins his freedom is never shown. This is the single flaw in a picture which carries a genuine wallop. The acting is magnificent—especially the performances by George Bancroft, Clive Brook and Evelyn Brent.

The Cast: George Bancroft, Evelyn Brent, Clive Brook, Larry Semon, Fred Kohler, Helen Lynch, Jerry Mandy, Karl Morse. Director, Joseph Sternberg.

THEME: Melodrama of gang feud and murder with regeneration of crooks after their buddy is executed.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The fight between gangsters and police. The feud between crooks. The love interest. The realism. The suspense. The acting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Go the limit in exploiting as the most realistic melodrama of the year. Play up stars and author and director. Tease the police slogan—"you can't win."

DRAWING POWER: Should draw heavy everywhere.

Produced and distributed by Famous Players. Length, eight reels. Released, August, 1927.

Smile, Brother, Smile

Pleasant Little Offering, Obvious But Okay

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE traveling salesman has his innings in this picture—and all things considered it shapes up as likely entertainment. Of course it is nothing to write superlatives over. The idea has been ground in celluloid time and again, but it has been treated semi-humorously enough to make it click with anyone who's not afflicted with a grouch. Jack Mulhall is the white haired boy in the picture and it can be chalked down that the piece is not in the same class as "The Poor Nut." He has one of those easy-going roles—and he plays it in an easy-going style.

The plot, however, is considerable of a chestnut. A young shipping clerk is determined to make good on a bigger job—inspired as he is by the telephone girl. So he becomes a salesman on the road—and frustrates the villain who, working for a rival company, tries to steal the business away from the hero's firm. Here is the idea—and you must admit it has been done quite a bit in celluloid. But the picture has its compensations in some wise-cracking subtitles—and some effective "business" while the boys are on the road.

If the spectators are not fed up on the plot, it should please them.

THEME: Comedy-drama of travelling salesman who outwits rival in getting the orders and winning the girl.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The episodes of the drummers. The development of the romance. The wise-cracking titles. The gags and incident. The easy acting by principals.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tie up with traveling salesman organizations, etc. Bill as breezy comedy-drama of the knights of the grip. Play up Mulhall and Miss Mackaill.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for average trade. Okay for neighborhood houses.

Produced and distributed by First National. Length, six reels. Released, August, 1927.

The Interferin' Gent

An Average Western With a Few Twists

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

NOT up to par is this Pathe release. Except for a few twists in the story, it impresses one as an ordinary Western. Of course, Buffalo Bill, Jr., makes his part realistic as he is a convincing performer dressed in cowboy garb, and Olive Hasbrouck is as sensible and pleasing an actress in her role of unprotected heroine as could reasonably be asked. Then again the picture is graced with the presence of Harry Todd, whose inimitable pantomime and facial changes help immensely in supplying comedy relief. Al Taylor, in the role of consumptive brother of the heroine and who the hero poses as, gives about the best delineation of all.

It is said that there are but nine or ten basic situations underlying the plots of all fiction stories and plays. In the main, the structure for this one has been well worn with constant use. A redeemable feature of the plot, however, is the unexpected disclosure of the identity of the consumptive brother, whom one suspects as a villain of some dye. In other respects, it follows the well trodden path of the lonely heroine the prey to fears caused by the evil maneuvering of a vulture eyed rogue. Buffalo Bill, Jr., gets his title of "The Interferin' Gent" because he responds to the call of knight errantry, helping a lady in distress. We do not think the average Western fan exercises so much discrimination about the plots of the various Westerns.

The Cast: Buffalo Bill, Jr., Olive Hasbrouck, Al Taylor, Harry Todd, E. W. Borman, Jack McDonald. Director, Richard Thorpe. Story by Range Rider.

THEME: Youthful cowman poses as brother to girl owner of ranch because he sees her in difficulties. He foils man who would defraud her of her ranch, and real brother backs him up for his chivalry. He wins the girl's good graces and hand.

Western drama.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: See comments above.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up Buffalo Bill, Jr., and highlights of story.

Border Blackbirds

Leo Maloney in a Good Western Vehicle

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A GOOD story is provided in Leo Maloney's latest for Pathe. While it is not as good as some of the star's vehicles that we have seen in the past and containing more of the usual Western hokum than we generally associate with the Maloney efforts, nevertheless satisfying entertainment is had for the hour or more of its unreeling. Disregarding the fact that its story material is a trifle too conventional, complimentary comment can be centered on the good points in the star's natural acting and competent direction, the freshness and femonine grace of Eugenia Gilbert, the leading lady, the screen treatment of Ford I. Beebe and the photography. The Western fans should walk out content after viewing it for plenty of action is scattered throughout its length, especially in the latter half. But it is the first half that is better produced; it is more convincing and the murder sequence incorporated in it is well handled.

With this killing, Maloney and his mournful friend, Nelson McDowell, are implicated as the murderers and placed in jail through the testimony of the real culprit, "Bud" Osborne and his pal-in-crime, Joseph Rickson. It is with the breaking of the jail and the gradual accumulation of tell tale evidence that Maloney gradually corners his men and catches them plying their criminal work.

The Cast: Leo Maloney, Eugenia Gilbert, Nelson McDowell, Joseph Rickson, Bud Osborne, Frank Clarke and Morgan Davis. Director, Leo Maloney.

THEME: Western drama of Canadian border. Hero, implicated in murder of girl's brother, wends his manful way through a mass of difficulties, proves his innocence, captures the guilty ones and wins the girl.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The murder. Hero's jailing and escape. Grand finale where hero outwits villains' henchmen, defeats them and aids mounted police in their capture.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: The usual Western ballyhoo.

DRAWING POWER: Good for action-loving fans.

Produced by Leo Maloney. Distributed by Pathe. Length, 5,326 feet. Released, August 28, 1927.

Ragtime

Jazz Story Thinly Varnished With Conviction

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

STARTING off promisingly enough as an able filmization of New York's Tin Pan Alley, throbbing jazz orchestras and night clubs and the folks connected with them, it soon falters by the wayside and becomes commonplace. Analyzing it, one finds that it has but an old song to sing, and one that does not sound fonder upon repetition, either.

A poor pianist in a jazz band, who's ambition is to write a song hit, is attracted by a wealthy society girl, and she to him. He composes a song, inspired by her loveliness, only another fellow steals it, has it published and wins the glory when it proves a success. The girl, as a result of the song's popularity, becomes ostracized by her class (because the piece was dedicated to her) and is even dismissed by her music teacher, who prefers the classics to the free and easy melodies of the day. The young pianist punishes the rogue who took the credit for writing the jazz hit, composes a nobler and more lofty song, melts the heart of the old music teacher with its melody and incidentally charms and captivates the girl, she having been called by the professor on the telephone to listen to the young jazz musician serenade her unwittingly.

The Cast: John Bowers, Marguerite de la Motte, Robert Ellis, Rose Dione, Wm. H. Strauss, Kate Bruce, Bernard Siegel. Director, Scott Penbroke.

THEME: Tin Pan Alley drama of stolen song hit and how its popularity rebounds upon society girl. Her injured dignity is softened and her heart won when young musician composes another melody in her honor.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Prison cafe scenes. Ellis' and Dione's characterizations. Latter's visit of vengeance to song publisher's office. Telephone climax.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: See above.

..DRAWING POWER: Not for sophisticated audiences. Okay for average.

Produced and Distributed by First Div. Distributors, Inc. Length, 6,700 feet. Released, August, 1927.

The Country Doctor

Strong in Qualities of Emotional Appeal

(Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy)

ELEMENTS of strong emotional appeal form a firm and substantial foundation upon which "The Country Doctor" should build up a creditable reputation as a popular success. This latest directorial effort of Rupert Julian reveals a sound and workmanlike quality in its pictorial treatment. It triumphs despite two handicaps which singly have accounted for the failure of more than one ambitions photoplay—from the box office standpoint, that is. These are the facts that it sets out to glorify a type, and that the central character is of middle age and beyond and therefore not the stuff of which romantic lovers are made. Largely it succeeds, in the opinion of this reviewer, because the director has adhered to conservative methods, aimed straight at fundamental dramatic effects and untouched by the more imaginative inventions of a rapidly developing newer technic.

Three good reasons are evident as the cause for the effectiveness of "The Country Doctor." These are the story, of direct, elemental appeal, the direction, and the unobtrusively powerful performance of the central character. Schildkraut the elder performs splendidly as Amos Rinker, M. D., whole-souled, and wholehearted "doc," who when the call comes goes forth and gives his best, regardless of personal sacrifice and hardship.

The Cast: Rudolph Schildkraut, Junior Coghlan, Virginia Bradford, Frank Marion, Sam De Grasse, Gladys Brockwell, Jane Keckley, Louis Natheaux, Ethel Wales. Directed by Rupert Julian.

THEME: Self sacrifice of country doctor, who incurs the enmity of the town's leading citizen. But when this man's son needs medical attention, Amos braves a terrific snowstorm, ascending the mountain to treat the seriously injured lad.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Strong human appeal, stirring climax and realism.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Stress as powerful drama of love of a boy for a girl and devotion of a doctor to duty.

DRAWING POWER: Is type that will build up on word of mouth publicity.

How Hot Does a Resistance Become?

IT is surprising how much of an argument such a simple thing as a resistance can provoke among persons who are really inclined to argue.

Just the other day the writer was privileged to "listen in" on a very heated discussion which revolved continuously—and, for a time, it seemed as if it would be endlessly—around the amount of heat which any respectable resistance unit should give off when it was supposed to be operating in a normal fashion.

The parties to this hot affair were the chief electrician of a theatre on the one side, and the representative of a well-known resistance manufacturer on the other. The argument finally ended in a deadlock since neither party was able to convince the other of the logic of his reasoning.

The bone of contention proved to be a bank of circular plate dimmers, driven by a motor, for regularly raising and lowering the current through three separate circuits of incandescent lamps. The total load involved was some 13,000 odd watts and the dimmer contractor arms were operated in such a manner as to make a complete cycle once every two minutes.

This latter has no bearing whatever on the principal argument, but it may serve to make the general set-up a little clearer to those on the side-lines.

The resistance units were of the well-known pancake type, being madeup of a cast iron, cupped shaped plate, on the front side of which were mounted the contact points, and on the other, the resistance elements imbedded in a vitreous enamel. The principle of the entire design was to insure great ruggedness with minimum size, for the entire motor driven equipment did not occupy a space greater than 3 ft. x 4 ft. x 2 ft.

Too Hot for Comfort

The theatre electrician claimed that the units were too hot for comfort and that he was in constant fear that the elements, if left to operate under those conditions, would quickly "go West"—or south—or wherever overworked resistance coils go when they finally curl up their toes and leave a "dark" house behind them.

The manufacturer's representative, on the other hand, was equally insistent that the resistance elements were quite all right and were operating in a perfectly normal manner and, indeed, far from "going West," they would, if anything, gradually work their way eastward since the entire mechanism was designed to have a proper factor of safety in the matter of over heating.

The basis of the electrician's argument was the surface temperature of the plates and he claimed that when said plates became too hot to touch comfortably, it was a positive sign that everything was far from being "jake." It seemed as though his previous experience with resistance centered mainly around another equipment which he had handled some years ago and which, for approximately the same amount of power, had been about three times as large. This equipment, it developed later, was of the open coil type, having its resistor elements freely exposed to the air.

He failed to see why one device should run so much better than another and explained it by saying that he believed the smaller equipment was generating an undue amount of heat and, therefore, was operating in a dangerous manner.

Surface Temperature and Radiation

The factory man patiently tried to explain that the true reason lay in the fact that the large unit had considerably greater radiating surface and furthermore was air cooled so that its framework and supporting mechanism would, naturally, be less likely to store up heat.

Most important of all, he pointed out that it was quite probable that the resistor elements were of such size and length that they were operating at a very low temperature and that what heat was generated was quickly dissipated into the air and not into the framework.

Everything considered, the operating temperature, undoubtedly, was much below what was required for safety, so that the size of the apparatus was greater than need be.

The smaller equipment, on the other hand, was generating no more heat but was operating at a higher surface in this condition, as long as the resistor elements were not heated above a safe value (approximately 400° C. Max.).

Since these resistor elements were entirely enclosed in a vitreous substance, which in itself is a poor heat conductor and thus stored it up, it was only natural that they would, in turn, be heated to a still higher temperature. The safe operating value, however, was in no danger of being exceeded and the mechanical construction of the equipment was such as to give no cause for alarm whatever.

The matter of the total heat given off by any resistance unit when in operation is easily settled and leaves no room for argument. The rate at which heat is emitted measured in watts will be equal to the square of the current multiplied by the resistance in ohms, or

$$P = I \times I \times R$$

In the case of two resistances where each is designed to take care of the same load, the heat given off by the both will be exactly the same no matter what the relative sizes of the units may be. In other words, it makes no difference whether one unit is twice as large as the other; if the load on each is the same the heat loss will also be the same.

This brings to mind the much discussed question concerning the amount of heat emitted by an incandescent lamp. The answer is simple—all of the electrical energy consumed by the lamp is converted into heat so that a 100 watt lamp will emit exactly 100 watts of heat; a 200 watt lamp, 200 watts, etc.

Of the 100 electrical watts put into the lamp, about 92 watts will never even reach the visible light stage but will be changed into heat waves and infra-red (also heat waves which are too long to be visible). The other 8 watts will be emitted in the form of visible light but each time these light rays strike an object and are reflected a certain percentage is lost and changed into heat so that eventually all of even these 8 watts of light are converted into heat.

Connect to Separate Circuit

One thing brought out by the factory man in his explanation was the necessity, in a bank of pancake resistance, of connecting each plate individually to its full rated load without overloading the plate by even a couple hundred watts. A bank of three plates, for example, connected in parallel to the entire load would incur the danger of one or two plates "hogging" the current, or at least taking more than their proper amount, with the result that early burnout of the unit would come.

It is for this reason that each plate is marked individually with the load rating for which it was designed and, furthermore, separate terminals are provided on each plate to permit of each being connected separately to its exact rated load.

Projectionists are cautioned, therefore, to follow the manufacturer's instructions in this respect and be careful not to attempt multiple hook-ups with such resistance banks.

Four Theatres Under Way in New England

Exterior work on the new Goldstein Brothers theatre in Chicopee, Mass., is completed and interior work started this week.

George Nelson Jacobs of Boston has completed plans for a new theatre to be built on Main Street, Fitchburg, Mass., for the Kenmore Realty Co. Bennett Rockman, of Newton, Mass., will be in general charge. The theatre will cost $300,000 exclusive of equipment.

Foundations have been completed and walls started on the new theatre on State Street, Springfield, Mass., for the Goldstein Brothers circuit, from plans by Architects Blackall, Clapp & Whittemore, of Boston.

Plans are being drawn by Architect Thomas Lamb, of New York City, for the Poli Memorial theatre in Springfield, Mass., which is to cost in excess of $1,000,000. An office building will be erected in conjunction with the project, to be ten stories high.

Salt Lake Business Man Plan New Theatre

Steps leading toward the erection of a beautiful new theatre on Main Street, Salt Lake City, have been taken by a group of prominent business men, according to report made public recently. The plan, it is stated, is to build the structure for use as one of the chain of playhouses used in presenting the Orpheum circuit attractions.

The site considered, it is announced, is on the west side of Main Street, between First and Second South Streets. The structure, which would be designed in L shape, would have a frontage on both Main and First South Sstreets, if constructed at this location, which has attracted attention for some time of several men of importance in the amusement world here, including motion picture magnates. A combination of men interested in amusement enterprises with indicated support from Salt Lake business men, has advanced the theatre building proposal toward definite form.

Brooks Elected 17th Time by Troy Operators

For the seventeenth time in as many years, Harry M. Brooks, former member of the New York State Asembly, was last week re-elected as president of the moving picture machine operators' union in Troy at the annual meeting. Alphonso LeMay was also re-elected as financial secretary for the seventeenth year. Others chosen were Felix Mangione, vice-president; Senaca M. Shaffer, treasurer; Louis Rimm, recording secretary. The board of trustees will consist of Michael McGrath, Dan Corcoran and Arthur Edge. The annual outing will be held some time in September. The operators will be represented this winter in the bowling league.

Fall Meet Committee of S. M. P. E. Listed

THE Committee of Arrangements for the Fall Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Whiteface Inn, Lake Placid, New York, September 26th to 29th, is as follows: Mrs. J. H. Theiss, H. T. Cowling, Louis Cuzzens, P. A. McGuire and J. I. Crabtree, Chairman.

Mr. Crabtree announces that twenty-one papers have already been listed on the tentative program and the completed list with the names of papers to be read and authors will be given out in about two weeks.

The addition of Mrs. J. H. Theiss, wife of J. H. Theiss, E. I. Du Pont-De-Nemours Co., to the Committee is an interesting novelty which will undoubtedly make the social side of the meeting very much more attractive from every standpoint.

Work Rapidly Progressing on Publix's Alabama

Work is rapidly progressing on Publix's new "Alabama." It is reported that the house will install a Wurlitzer pipe-organ, approximately the same instrument as now being used in the Chicago Theatre. It is quite evident from construction thus far completed that Publix intends the Alabama to be one of its finest units, and Birmingham is expectantly awaiting the announcements preceding the opening.

Two More New Theatres for Downtown Brooklyn

Two new theatres will soon be added to Brooklyn's downtown section when William Fox's new house is completed and another smaller theatre known as the Montmartre gets under way the early part of September.

The Fox project is a large one and will be included among those houses which will be under the supervision of S. L. "Roxy" Rothafel.

Several Shifts Among Theatres in Pacific-Northwest

SEVERAL changes in theatre ownership, management, policy and price have been made in the Pacific Northwest territory recently, according to news emanating from reliable sources in Seattle, Washington.

The Hollywood Theatre, one of Seattle's newer suburban houses, was sold last week by Si Danz to a Mr. Clapp of California, who plans to operate the theatre.

The Yesler Theatre, another Seattle neighborhood playhouse, was bought by N. Levin from Mr. and Mrs. S. Z. Williams this week. The Williams will continue to operate the Good Luck Theatre, and the South Park Theatre will remain under Mr. Levin's direction.

The Hollywood Theatre at Ellensberg, Washington, was taken over last week by Harry Ulsh, who acquired the house at an exceptionally advantageous figure. The house has been temporarily closed for renovating.

F. C. Weskil of Sand Point, Idaho, last week let the contract for his new 1,000 seat house in that city. It is expected that the theatre will be ready for opening early in December.

Construction will also begin soon on Calvin Heilig's new $150,000 theatre in the Oregon territory. The house will seat 1700 and will be ready for opening late in the fall.

The United Artists and Fifth Avenue Theatres in Seattle, owned and operated by West Coast Theatres, last week raised their Sunday evening admission prices to 60 cents, as against the former 50 cents admission that has been in effect all during the summer season.

Ensley Theatre Latest Addition to Wilby-Alabama Chain

ONE of the latest addtions to the R. B. Wilby chain of theatres in Alabama, the new beautiful $100,000 Ensley Theatre, Ensley, Ala., will open on the evening of Monday, August 29, at 7:30 o'clock.

D. O. Whilldin, the architect, has carried out the popular Spanish-Moorish idea in the design and an attractive tower, which can be seen for blocks away, stands at the corner of the structure.

The interior of the theatre is treated in many distinctive designs and, like the exterior, is Spanish to a large extent. Gold and green are the predominating colors.

One of the most attractive parts of the theatre is the inside foyer, where there is an unusually pretty fountain with goldfish. Rest rooms for both men and women are conveniently located near th auditorium and a drinking fountain of bright tiles is to be found near the foyer.

A Robert Morton organ of the latest type is a special feature of the equipment and an organist famous for her broadcasting from one of the largest radio stations in the country will be at the console. Chairs from the Heywood-Wakefield Company are large and comfortable, while the red and gold Spanish carpeting adds much charm to the appearance of the auditorium.

A. V. Summers, formerly with the Jefferson Theatre in Birmingham, has been chosen as manager of the house, according to Dick Kennedy, resident manager of the Wilby theatres in Birmingham.

Joseph Aller, Production Manager of the West Coast plant Consolidated Laboratories.

Power Studios in Charge of Denver Job

Contracts covering the complete remodeling of the America Theatre in Denver, Col., have been signed by the Robert E. Power Studios. This house is one of the many being run throughout the country under the direction of Universal Pictures Corporation. Work will begin at once, and the house will close down for one week, opening about August 21st.

The present design of the interior is Adams mixed with Empire, and the plan is to alter the house, adhering strictly to the Empire Period. Alterations will be made not only to the auditorium but to the foyers, outside lobby, and marquee, as well. New lighting fixtures will be installed, and the stage will be re-equipped completely. When finished the interior will be entirely changed.

The Robert E. Power Studios are in charge of the complete alterations and, while working on the America Theatre in Denver, they will also have crews of men working on the alterations of the Orpheum Theatre in Salt Lake City, and the decorating of the new Bachechi Theatre in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Work will be started soon on the decorating of the new theatre under construction at Twenty-third and Central Avenue, Los Angeles. The interior of this building is almost ready and the Robert E. Power Studios will begin work there within the next few days.

Consolidated Maintains 24-Hour Service on Coast

One of the most important branches of the laboratory business is the developing of negative and the making of the first prints. This is one that requires the most specialized equipment and the most expert craftsmen to handle it successfully.

Joseph Aller, production manager of Consolidated Film Laboratories' West Coast plant, says: "These 'dailies' or 'rushes' are the first evidence of each step in the making of a picture, and are anxiously awaited by directors, camera men and producers, and everyone connected with production, in order that they judge as to what has been accomplished, check on their picture apparatus, the lighting and action, and proceed with their next scene. Due to the immense hourly or daily cost of all elements of production, the need for speed is most obvious. Consolidated has met this by maintaining a 24-hour-a-day service."

Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Moves Cleveland Office

The Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Company, of Milwaukee, Wis., manufacturers of electric controlling devices, announce that their Cleveland Office has been moved from the Guardian Trust Building to the Guarantee Title Building, Suite 1905. The new office has approximately three times the space of the old with increased facilities, made necessary by the large and growing business.
